THE SOFTNESS OF YOUTH
 The primary cause of the softness of youth, the delicacy and weakness of growing children, the physical unfitness of so many millions of young men for military service—they were rejected in a relatively greater number in World War II than in World War I is nutritional deficiency.

Dr. Brady Nutritional deficiency conveys a suggestion of poverty, hunger or not enough to eat, or, in the lingo of the Thursday Discussion Club, malnutrition.

It is malnutrition, all right, but poverty, hunger, lack of enough to eat has nothing to do with it. Supplying a glass of milk for each school child, or better two glasses, is a step in the right direction, a good gesture, but even this most nearly perfect food will not correct nutritional deficiency if the youngster's appetite or hunger is satisfied or appeased for the time being by candy, pop, cocoa, sweetened tea or coffee or chocolate, fluffed pap from a pretty package or so-called bread, cake and other dainties made of refined white flour. That is the way the appetite or hunger of most American children is satisfied—and of course, it is only for the time being. Such refined flour and refined sugar concoctions not only appease the hunger or appetite quickly, but yields plenty of calories for the immediate renewal of energy.

All of these refined food items are easily digested, easy to eat or drink whether one is hungry or thirsty or not, available everywhere, cheap, and they yield plenty of calories. The objection to them, in the proportions they are used in the everyday diet of growing children in America, is that they not only supply virtually none of the vitamins and minerals which are essential for health, growth, development, vigor, vite and physical fitness, not to mention enjoyment of life and longevity; but also such excess of pure carbohydrate (starch and sugar) increases the requirement for vitamin B1 (thiamin) particularly, since this vitamin is necessary for complete metabolism or use of carbohydrate in the body.

Any one who consumes the
