Memo from a friend

"Dear Standard of California:

"Years ago I took to leaving my No. 2 overcoat at the office—just in case. Since then so many optimistic acquaintances have arrived in town with only a toothbrush for baggage—and have gone home wearing my second-best Benny—that I think of them as my Overcoat Club.

"That's why I had the nerve recently to offer a membership to a brand-new acquaintance, even if, until a few days ago, he was a full 'chicken' colonel with lots of ribbons and influence in his community. He was just home from the tropics—and shivering.

"Afterward he told me he doubted if a five-star general could get a store-bought civilian overcoat in these clothing-shortage days. So, until some store supplies him, Old No. 2 is keeping him warm. And we're both happy.

"All this moves me to ask you to write one of those non-commercial ads of yours and suggest that—instead of leaving everything to Uncle Sam—everybody try person-to-person ways of helping veterans.

"Remember that—unlike your 8,000—not all veterans have jobs a-waiting. Many youngsters are groping for a start. Many older veterans face problems in picking up those loose ends. Others must find ways to use new capabilities and a new maturity.

"When such men knock at our doors for counsel, let's earn a fine inward glow by giving them our best personal attention. Let's remember they did not hesitate when it was their turn to do something for us—in person. So how about that ad?... Can do?... J.H."

Answer: Dear J.H.: Can do! You've done it!

News Behind The News

By Paul Mallon

Washington, Feb. 25—In complete official privacy, the state department has spent some weeks getting up a new statement of American foreign policy. The only great question of policy, of course, is how to treat Russia. On this, the paper was not illuminating in its original form.

The Byrnes policy established at Moscow and London since mid-December has been substantially this: Press no point which would be offensive to Russian claims. Retreat on policy as much as possible and accept Russian contentions. The apparent but not professed purpose has been to entice Russia out of her nationalistic isolation in dealing in the world of affairs.

THIS has kept world news rather calm but events behind the news, particularly from Europe, are working up boldly and may break sensationally. Do not, for instance, let yourself be currently misled into believing the domination of the French government by communists and socialists is a permanent arrangement, or that the name of De Gaulle will remain forever in retirement from French politics. Give greater notice than has been given to the victory of the Belgian Catholic party over both communists and socialists. Belgium is half French with all the same elements of French politics in miniature. Indeed throughout Europe, even in Yugoslavia, the resistance to communism is taking the only effective form yet evidenced in the gathering together of Catholic elements.

I have heard American statesmen say these Christian groups are the only ones in the world today who know how to resist communism, ideologically or politically. They have a firm ideology themselves.

BRITAIN was the first nation to talk up to the soviets, but the diplomatic resistance of Bevin at the London UNO conference was tactical rather than formidable. The Russians had raised the question of British influence in Greece, primarily to cover their own tracks in Poland, the Balkans, Iran, Turkey and other places where they are attempting to extend their influence. They forced Britain to the defensive by raising this question.

After accomplishing this purpose, and succeeding in getting UNO to allow Moscow to deal separately with a pro-communism Iranian prime minister installed at Tehran for the purpose—Russia withdrew her Greek charges against Bevin. The Indonesian charges she continued to press, keeping Britain on the defensive.

Bevin, treating with Moscow, twice passed "the lie" to them and they backed down, true enough. But when you add up the results, you will see Russia won the action she wanted from UNO, while Bevin won nothing except the red herring.

PRESIDENT Truman, meanwhile, is recognizing that the army seem to know how to get along with the soviets, without losing their shirts, better than our timid and confused diplomats. He chose Gen. Marshall to go to China to get Chiang into a peace with the communists; and now he has selected Gen. Eisenhower's chief of staff to be ambassador to Moscow, instead of a diplomat or a politician.

Army men, by nature, should be more interested in results than in the political ideas of justice for this and that, which have so confused our diplomats in recent years. (Latest example: Joe Davies, who thinks Russian spying on Canada justified, but no doubt would cry out against any Canadian spying on Russia, whereas any realist knows all nations have always spied on all others and always will.)

THIS new reliance on army realism is the most hopeful development in American foreign policy, in contrast to these childish but pompous accumulations of vaporous generalities the state department plans to put out under the claim that they are great state pronouncements. I mean it is most important, if a recent pronouncement by Mrs. Roosevelt does not outmeasure it.

Mrs. Roosevelt has been recognized as a spokesman for the class-thought which pressured Byrnes into the appeasement policy, causing him to retreat from his resistance established at the London council of foreign ministers last summer. She has counseled a giving policy and believed realism to be red-baiting. But to the American soldier in Germany, after a little personal experience in dealing with Russia herself at UNO, she gave this formula for treating with communists:

Have convictions. Be friendly. Stick to your beliefs as they stick to theirs. Work as hard as they do.

This is substantially the counsel you have read in this spot for a couple of years. It comes closer to answering the great question of policy than state department pronouncements will come. But if it also represents a change of front by the class of Americans for whom Mrs. Roosevelt usually speaks, it is the most significant recent development in foreign affairs.

MAJOR NAUMES RETURNS AFTER 4-YEAR SERVICE

Robert A. Naumes, who was inducted into the army March 7, 1942, as a private, was recently discharged from the Air Transport command with the rank of major and is now in Medford on terminal leave. The young man was never able to return home to visit relatives during the entire four years he was in the army.

Major Naumes, who graduated from officers' candidate school in 1942, was stationed in Labrador over a year and was later assigned to headquarters, North Atlantic Wing of the ATC. The major's last assignment was deputy assistant chief of staff for priorities and traffic to Brig. Gen. James S. Stowell at NAW headquarters, Manchester, New Hampshire.

Major and Mrs. Naumes and son, Peter, are making their home with the major's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Naumes of 1001 South Oakdale avenue for the present. Mrs. Naumes is the daughter of Mrs. W. A. Thompson, 135 North Holly street.
