FORTUNE
Health is like a fortune at interest, the income from which, economically used, will support you; but it cannot be squandered at any period through life, without being brought into account, and shortening and enfeebling it in exact proportion. Spending foolishly draws on the principle, and every draft, great or little, must be reckoned into that final settlement which every draft hastens. As the faster you draw the sooner you exhaust it, so all overeating, overworking, loss of sleep, improper habits, colds, and whatever injures health, is a draft on the constitution cashed in at a hundred per cent discount, till, when your life-fund is expended, but not till then, death summons you to your final reckoning. Every abuse of health enfeebls it for life, and hastens its close.
