Hog Buried Under 20 Tons of Straw For Four Months

Beardstown, Ill. (U.P.)—A hog owned by Henry Berger near here is grunting again after being buried under 20 tons of straw for four months. During that time the hog had neither food nor water.

The straw stack on Berger's farm collapsed last August, trapping 22 of his hogs. Berger and his hired man rescued seven of the animals, but 14 of them were found dead.

They thought they had accounted for all of the hogs until recently they found another buried alive under the remnants of the stack. The hog, which originally weighed 350 pounds, had lost 200 pounds. It had lain in the same position for 120 days. Berger is nursing it back to health.

JUST WHAT ARE YOU INCUBATING?
 It dawned on me with tremendous shock the other day that after years of argument, preaching, propaganda—one man propaganda—aimed at I don't know how many millions of people, I have converted possibly a hundred thousand individuals (a mere handful compared with the millions that must have heard my harangues now and then) and so far as I know, not one solitary practicing physician to my creed about respiratory infection, much less to calling the unidentified Common Respiratory Infection (pronounced kree, term coined from the initial letters of Common Respiratory Infection) in the early stage before either the affected individual, the doctor, or anybody who happens to be within the affected individual's conversational spray range can possibly tell what it is going to be—whether a comparatively mild coryza or sore throat or an attack of measles or scarlet fever, or meningitis or infantile paralysis.

Dr. Brady

I am troubled with objectionable foot odor. (H. O.)
 Answer—Send stamped self-addressed envelope (but no clipping, please) by education to Excessive Sweating. When the sweat has a foul odor the trouble is called "bromidrosis."

BURGLAR KILLED IN BANK ROBBERY

Glencoe, Okla., Feb. 26.—(U.P.) Payne county officers early today surprised burglars in the Glencoe State Bank, and killed one of them in a 15-minute gun-battle.

Sheriff E. G. Schroeder of Stillwater said a drivers license in the dead man's pocket was made out to "Ralph Davis, 33, Joplin, Mo."

Despite a fusillade of bullets, the companion—or companions—of the slain burglar escaped. Tipoff on the burglary attempt came from Tom Brown, operator of the Glencoe Telephone Exchange. The bandits apparently jarred the bank
