Washington Report

Washington, Jan. 26—(U.P.)—About one more broadside and the shattered hulk of the American bi-partisan foreign policy is going to turn turtle. The salvo recently fired by Sen. Taft over the Formosa issue was definitely hit below the water line.

Several Oregon congressmen have joined in the sniping and an "educated guess" indicates more will follow soon.

Rep. Harris Ellsworth keynoted today what may soon become the standard republican approach to the U. S. foreign policy. He repudiated the bi-partisan foreign policy on the grounds that it was nothing more than fiction.

As a former newspaper publisher, Ellsworth has long been abreast of foreign affairs. He agrees that the theory behind the bi-partisan foreign policy was very desirable and cites it as a big morale builder during the war.

But since the war, the Roseburg congressman maintains that the bi-partisan foreign policy has been a one way street. In other words, the administration has decided what the policy would be, then expected the uncounseled republicans to support it.

Stockman Dissents

Rep. Lowell Stockman of Pendleton has also recently indicated his dissent to the existing bi-partisan foreign policy approach. Since his recent European visit with a house of representatives investigating committee, the eastern Oregon congressman has shown a keen interest in foreign affairs.

He sees the administration leaders' failure to take counsel with the republicans as the reason for the disintegration of our bi-partisan approach to foreign affairs.

Senator Cordon has not expressed himself on the foreign affairs issue, but from sources close to the Roseburg senator comes word that he has been doing some pondering on the issue. From available information it looks as though a scathing denunciation of the administration tactics on the foreign problem will probably be forthcoming.

Cordon is known to view the old idea of a minority party taking potshots at the majority to keep them on their toes, as a healthy situation. And it might be added that it is upon this theory that our American two-party system operates.

It is for this reason that this reporter finds himself in agreement with those who say, let's do away with this bi-partisan foreign policy, for the way it is being operated at present is doing more harm than good.

On the other side of the picture we find Sen. Wayne Morse of Eugene. He is definitely a follower of the Vandenberg school of thought on foreign affairs and probably will be the last to jump ship on the bi-partisan question.

In the recent debacle in the senate over the Formosa question Morse found himself paired with Vandenberg defending bi-partisanship against most of the republican leaders.

Lacked Blue Ox

In Rep. Lowell Stockman's speech to the Northeastern Retail Lumbermen's association in New York this week, the only thing he lacked was a big blue ox.

The "six foot six, biggest of them all" congressman addressed the group wearing typical logger garb. And in the best Paul Bunyan tradition, he rendered some tales of the North woods.

One of the tales he spun was about his government making job. He said he made it with sourdough as a starter but that was a mistake because it just started rising and never stopped.

Another Bunyan-like yarn he related was about his government agency forming. Two of the best ones were the R.R.A. and the F.D.R.

The F.D.R. agency was better known as the Frog and Duck Relief while the R.R.A. was the moniker for the rabbit Relief administration which was formed for the rabbit critters who were starving in the woods.

V. I. P.'s

A lot of Oregon V.I.P.'s (very important persons) are in Washington this week for various and sundry reasons.

Roy Ward of the Pacific Wool Growers hit the city with a bang last week and has been throwing his weight around. He reports that he has landed a subsidy for the wool growers at an expected 90 per cent of parity figure.

He also confided that he thinks he brow-beat secretary of agriculture Charles Brannan into giving the sheepmen a break on the subsidy this year. Supposedly, Brannan is going to issue regulations permitting the wool growers to submit their product to the government for appraisal. Then, if they can find a better price, they will be permitted to back out of their agreement.

In former years, when the wool was submitted to the government for appraising, the sheepmen were stuck and had to go through with the deal even though they found a better bargain through private channels. Now this regulation is to be changed.

The conclusion is—they didn't pull the wool over Roy Ward's eyes.

Others here on business include Ralph Cake, the republican national committeeman; John Trunk of the Filbert Growers association, and Allan Smith, who is here making a plea for the preservation of the Pacific Power and Light company.

It seems that the securities and exchange commission has declared that the American Power and Light company, which is a big holding company, should be disbanded. The Pacific Power and Light is one of the subsidiaries and in the process of breaking up the American Power and Light company, the Pacific Power and Light company will also be destroyed.

The reason for this is that all the capital stock of the Pacific company is now held by the American company and the directors of the American company are planning to sell the stock piecemeal to various groups all over the country. The net result of this would be: no more Pacific Power and Light company.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Give Us Back Our Sidewalks, Slim!

I wrote that over an article in the Clarion last week, but I didn't like doing it. After all, the man it was aimed at — Slim Henderson — is a good friend of mine.

Slim came into quite a windfall last month, and bought the old Clarke place. The deed gave him title to all the land—right down to the street. Then Slim started to take up the sidewalk to make his lawn look better.

I felt it wasn't fair to the town and said so in my article. Next morning Slim comes around and wants to know what I mean—getting folks riled against him. I felt ornery myself, and we had quite a set-to over the whole business.

From where I sit, that was foolish. Once we'd cooled off (over lunch and a bottle of beer at Andy's Tavern), Slim decided the sidewalks should stay—for the common good and I promised next time I'd take a good look at the other fellow's point of view before writing any articles about him!

....AROUND HOLLYWOOD

By VIRGINIA MacPHERSON
United Press Correspondent

Hollywood, Jan. 26—(U.P.)—A movie audience of 600 fans who had come to see Hopalong Cassidy didn't seem to like the first public screening of Ingrid Bergman's "Stromboli," persons who were there reported today.

Virginia MacPherson

The Swedish star gave up her husband, child and career when she made the picture, which has been described by press agents as her greatest work and one of the best ever made.

"There was a lot of enthusiasm when the name came on the screen," Palmer Waslin, manager of the theater in Long Beach, Cal., said. "But the picture wasn't accepted too well. There's a lot of Italian in it, you know."

The preview cards were unfavorable too, he said, and a man who saw six said all were critical. (RKO, which will release the picture, said there "weren't any cards.").

"Stromboli" was supposed to display a new, unfettered, sexy Bergman. But a studio executive at the sneak preview said she was sexier in "Saratoga Trunk."

Hard To Sell

"I thought it was artistically one of the finest things ever done," the executive said. "But it's going to be hard to sell. It's a 20-minute travelog of Stromboli in an 89-minute film. When things get dull, they throw in a little sex.

"They can't sell it as a sensation though. It's definitely not another 'outlaw'."

A newspaperman at the preview said the picture was "brilliantly done" but had "no commercialism."

"There were a few gasps when the title came on, and scattered clapping when it was over," he said. "Bergman got a few whistles in one scene when she got out of bed in her slip."

Fishermen Mario Vitale got a few giggles in impassioned love scenes. The executive said he proves when he speaks English that he can't act.

All three pointed out that the picture probably would get a better reception in big city art theatre than among an audience which had just viewed cowboys and Indians in Hopalong Cassidy's "False Paradise."

Miss Bergman's embarrassing publicity apparently hasn't turned fans against her. Waslin said they seemed pleased to see her, and the executive said some applauded her appearance.

In India's Kashmir state has been developed a new process by which the yield of silkworm eggs in cocoons can be doubled. Hitherto less than 80 pounds of cocoons could be obtained out of every single ounce of eggs.
