Planes To Fly So Fast That Human Pilots Will Have To Give Way To Robots. Specialist Predicts

By Paul F. Ellis
United Press Science Editor
New York, Feb. 16—(U.P.)—Man is learning to fly so rapidly that the day may be coming when the electronic brain will have to take over the controls. Man, according to S. Paul Johnston, director of the Institute of Aeronautical Sciences, "can't stand the gaff" at 1,500 miles an hour, a speed which he predicts might become a reality in 1955.

"There is no doubt whatever that we now possess the know-how to build practical aircraft that will fly at speeds of 1,000 to 1,500 miles an hour, or even faster," he reported to the Cooper Union.

It is not sure, he said, that such high-speed planes will have military value.

Limits Of Endurance

Johnston said "no human pilot" could operate a plane going 1,500 miles an hour.

"At 1,000 miles per hour, a pilot is traveling almost a quarter of a mile a second. In the time that it takes you to count five slowly you are a mile from where you started. And at such speeds, to make a turn of anything less than a mile radius is an invitation to 'black out,' even when wearing the best of our so-called 'G' suits."

He believes that man is nearing his limits of endurance, and that there are machines now that can do a job better than a human brain.

"The obvious thing to do," he said, "is to take the human being out of the machine; to replace him with electronic and mechanical devices that can do the pilot's work and still survive."

Sees Days Of Missiles
Johnston said intercontinental guided missiles equipped with atomic or high-explosive warheads "are certainly under intensive study and development by every major power in the world."

"How soon they will be ready for use on an effective scale is still anybody's guess," he added.

"For the next decade, at least, any intercontinental warfare will be waged with piloted aircraft. Long range jet bombers flying at speeds of over 600 miles per hour, at altitudes of 30,000 to 40,000 feet, will press home the attack on military and industrial objectives deep in enemy territory."

Johnston also believes that the idea of an artificial satellite, or moon, is "within our reach."

"My guess is," he said, "that the job might be done in 25 to 30 years, if really pushed."
