WEDNESDAY REALTY VIEWS

"My Hobby?" exclaimed Ben, a chunky man about 40. "Well, maybe I don't have one—unless you'd count real estate TRADING. I've spent a lot of time doing that in the last ten years."

We knew he had. He had horses—trading blood in his veins. We had sold property to him and for him several times, but each time he came back again with a new idea.

"You may not remember," he said, "but I arrived here with very few assets. However, I made them do. I first traded for a small tract on the edge of the city."

"How much down payment?" I asked. He grinned as he answered. "Just a Model A Ford and an old cow. Over the years I've kept trading until my equity now is worth about $5,000."

"That's good," I remarked. "Sure," he said with a smile. "If I'd never started, the Model A would now be in some junk heap and the cow would be dead."

Well, frankly, folks, that fellow may have something there, at that. While trading may not be desirable (unless you have itchy feet), it is a good idea to get started owning your own place—no matter how small it may be at first.
