

.... AROUND HOLLYWOOD

By VIRGINIA MacPHERSON
United Press Correspondent

Hollywood, Mar. 10.—(U.P.)—Every Hollywood actor should play a movie cowboy at least once a year, Jimmy Stewart said today.

Virginia MacPherson

The role keeps a gent from getting neurotic. There's nothing like a little game of cowboys and Indians to keep a movie profile from getting too big for its breeches, Stewart said.

"It does something for an actor," drawled the lanky gent whose frame is custom-built for skin-tight blue jeans. "You take off your tux or your British tweeds and crawl into a pair of chaps and a gun belt and . . . well . . . all of a sudden something happens to you inside."

Gives a guy that "Hopalong Cassidy" feeling, it does. And anybody knows there's nothing better'n that.

"I'm a sharpshootin' cowpoke in this," Stewart said, on the set of his latest film. "Feel like I could lick the world."

Stewart makes a very fine looking cowpoke. He is also a recent bridegroom, which might account for that top-of-the-world feeling.

Good For A Man

"No kidding," said the bridegroom-cowpoke. "Getting out on the open plains with a rifle and a western hat is good for a man. Sort of restores his balance between the everyday world of modern movies and the world of the sagebrush."

Stewart thinks too many Hollywood heroes turn up their Grecian profiles at routin'-tootin' western roles, believing they're beneath the talents of a he-man lover.

"Heck," said Stewart. "Those are the kind of guys I call the 'drawing room boys.' They've balanced a cup of tea on one knee and a blonde on the other so long they don't want to try anything else."

Used to feel that way himself, he said. Then somebody talked him into a pasture operetta called "Destry Rides Again." The star in the other saddle in that one was a gorgeous cowgirl name of Marlene Dietrich.

Uninhibited Actor
"And I figured," Stewart shrugged, "if a gal like Marlene could start chewing sagebrush, there was no reason why I shouldn't have a fling at it. And by the time I'd finished, I was ready to walk into any Beverly Hills drawing room in a pair of Levis and a 10-gallon hat."

"I was an uninhibited actor at last!"

Stewart said half the male population of Hollywood is itching to hope on the chuck wagon. For one thing, westerns are always cinch money-makers at the box-office.

And then, again, there's always that lick-your-neurosis feeling. And this is the first time we ever suspected there were so many uninhibited actors around.

Alleged Death Note Introduced At Trial

Frankfurt, Germany, Mar. 10.—(U.P.)—A note in which Mrs. Yvette Madsen allegedly wrote that she was going to shoot her husband was read today at her murder trial.

Mrs. Madsen, 22, a Brooklyn brunette, is on trial charged with shooting Lt. Andrew Madsen, 32, a U. S. air force pilot, at their Frankfurt home October 20.

Prosecutor Worth B. McCauley read into the trial record a mysterious note, often mentioned in the case but never before made public. It was found in the Madsen home after the fatal shooting which followed a drinking party at the home of a fellow officer.

The note, which he said was written by Mrs. Madsen, said she intended to shoot her husband because he was going to "beat me up."

Kidnaped Manila Man Released Unharmed

Manila, P. I., Mar. 10.—(U.P.)—A kidnaped Manila businessman was released unharmed today after his family paid a $50,000 ransom.

The victim, Vicente Araneta, president of the Ramie Development corporation, identified his kidnapers as guerrillas who fought the Japanese during the war.

He said they told him at first they were Hukbalahaps, communist-led dissident peasants who have been fighting the government since the end of the war. Later, however, he learned they were not, he said.
