Delake 'Monster' To Be Destroyed By Gasoline Fire

DeLake, Ore., Mar. 16—(U.P.)—DeLake's unclassified "sea monster" will be disposed of later this week if a combination of oil, gasoline, and old tires can feed a fire hot enough to boil down the remains, Randolph Allum, operator of the "Tourist cafe," here, said today.

"We tried to burn up a chunk of 'Jughead' the other day with a gallon of gasoline and five or six gallons of oil," Allum said, "but the flesh just curled up."

County Commissioner Jack Patterson said he had seen all kinds of sea life, including remnants of whales, but the DeLake "monster" was something new to him. "I'd say it was a member of the jellyfish or squid group," he guessed.

Incomplete Test
 DeLakers debunked the results of a chemical analysis on "Jughead" made shortly after it was washed ashore. They said an incomplete test was performed by an Oregon state game commissioner when he said the "monster" was whale blubber.

Residents said seagulls refused to touch "Jughead" even when pieces were cut off and spread out on the sand. DeLakers said the aroma of their castaway is not too strong yet, but they want to dispose of the prize before warm spring weather arrives.

"This is no ordinary animal," Allum stated. "It's flesh is too tough for the average hunting knife, and it takes an axe to cut out any of the main body."

How large should a man be to be rightly considered a "fat man?" Let us listen to the opinion on this matter of "Pop" Scher, an outstanding expert on the subject. "Pop" runs the world famous Fat Man's Shop on Third Ave., Manhattan. Says he: "Men with waists from forty-six to fifty-two think they're fat, but you've got to get up into the sixty-inch waist group to be really rated a fat man."

Nature's Mistakes.
 Living on the island of St. Helena is a tortoise that was alive when Napoleon was there. Nobody can deny that nature is wonderful, but some of its works are beyond understanding. I mean why produce an animal such as a tortoise that will live several centuries and then not furnish it with the power of

Craves State Prison But Gets County Jail

Fond du Lac, Wis. (U.P.)—Harold H. Zoltman wanted to go to the state prison but he only got a county jail term.

Zoltman said he would like to go to Waupun state prison where he could "rest, regain weight, and be sure of three squares a day."

He said earlier in his vagrancy trial that if he didn't get the Waupun sentence he would "go out and steal a car" to make sure he would get to the state institution.

Bessie had nothing but a verbal contract with Griffith, but she said: "I cannot consider it without discussing it with Mr. Griffith. I gave him my word. We shook hands on it. That's a kind of contract I would never break."

Canby Farmer Trades Crop For China Fireworks

Canby, Ore., Mar. 16—(U.P.)—The shooting war in China apparently won't slow down this country's loud celebration of Independence day next July.

Twenty tons of Chinese fireworks were in storage today on the R. M. Weygandt farm near here. They arrived in Portland last week by freighter from Hong Kong.

Weygandt traded his ginseng root crop for the crackers, which will be distributed to dealers throughout the west by the farmer's own Western Fireworks company.

Tariffs Paid
 Tariffs ranging from four to 12½ cents were paid to the United States government by Weygandt for the fireworks. The highest tariff was on the two-inch salute 'crackers.'

The fireworks were packed in paper-covered, wooden cases wrapped in straw matting. This is the third consecutive year Farmer Weygandt has traded his ginseng crop for Chinese fireworks.

The aromatic root of the ginseng herb is highly valued as a medicine in China. It has a sweetish taste, like that of licorice.
