SIAMESE TWINS—Shown above are Kathlee Rose and Lexie Irene, Siamese twins born to Mrs. Erskine Smith in Wynyard, Australia. Doctors said they ate, cried, moved, functioned quite independently and except for being joined, they seemed to be normal, healthy girls. The Tasmanian Provincial Government indicated it would engage specialist, to see if surgery could separate the girls. The 35-year-old parents have three sons and two other daughters.

Coal Industry Concerned Over Switch to Other Fuel

By Robert E. Lee
United Press Correspondent

Washington, Mar. 20—(U.P.)—How sick is the coal industry?

Will it lose even more markets to oil and natural gas when customers feel the effects of price rises resulting from the new wage and welfare benefits won by John L. Lewis?

Those are the questions being asked today by producers, by government economists, and—quietly—by Lewis and his United Mine Workers.

Some soft coal operators announced price increases last week to cover at least part of the 23 cents a ton they estimate the new coal contract will cost them.

Other producers—and retailers—are expected to follow suit soon.

But they are moving cautiously. Many will try to absorb as much of the added cost as possible to keep from driving more customers to other fuels.

For coal, which powered the world's industrial revolution and until recently has been the only important source of industry's energy, is losing ground rapidly in the fuel market.

In some parts of the country, it has priced itself out already because of rising production and transportation costs combined with the greater availability — and comparatively lower price trends—of oil and natural gas.

The coal producers' answer to this new competition is: Chop production costs by holding wages in line.

They place most of the blame for the industry's position on Lewis, because labor represents 60 per cent of their costs.

Labor Human Factor

But the miners' immovable leader has his own problems, generated by the same forces which have the operators on the spot. Labor is the human factor in the picture.

In a contracting industry — which only in war years has provided better than an average of 185 working days annually — Lewis is trying to maintain daily wages to compensate for reduced demand for labor.

Next to labor, transportation is the biggest factor in coal's dollar troubles. Freight rates and higher pay for the miners have joined to double the average price of coal delivered since World War II began.

Producers insist the coal industry isn't sick. One says:

'It only looks that way because of the pallor Lewis and his labor monopoly have cast on it."
