Radio Patter by Pat

For an action-packed broadcast tune in the Cavalcade of Sports tonight over Station KYJC at 7. Roland LeStarza tangles with Rocky Marciano in a heavyweight 10-rounder at Madison Square Garden. This promises to be a sizzler and you won't want to miss the excitement.

David and Ricky Nelson complain about the need for more spending money to set off a new experiment in homemaking on "The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet" tonight over Station KYJC and the ABC network at 9.

To teach them the value of a dollar, Ozzie works out a point system of merits and demerits, paying the boys in accordance with the outcome.

A discussion of "Regional Apple Research" by Dr. Frances Van Duyne of the University of Illinois, as interviewed by Jesse Heathman of the university extension service, will be the highlight of the Saturday "American Farmer" program, to be heard over Station KYJC and ABC at 10:30 a. m.

Many parents already have definite ideas on the subject, but the teen-agers are still undecided on "Is Teen-Age Chivalry Dead?" so Frank Kukix, 17, a Kelly high senior from Chicago, who thinks those days are gone forever, will debate this "Junior Junction" forum topic with an 18-year-old girl, Marilyn Sorensen, of Kelvyn high school, when the program is heard over KYJC tomorrow at 3 p. m.

Immediately following "Junior Junction," KYJC will present an unusual Boy Scout of America radio program—Tribe 1260—by re-broadcast. Tribe 1260 is written by William Tunberg, radio, motion picture and fiction writer, or his wife, Jacqueline D. Tunberg, who is at present residing at Trail, Ore., while working on a musical comedy.

Comment On This and That

By HARMAN W. NICHOLS
United Press Feature Writer

Washington, Mar. 24 —(U.P.)— In France the skies are pea green. At least they are in paintings at the Corcoran Gallery of Art where the prize-winning works of 70 con tem porary artists are on exhibit.

Harman Nichols

Among the French paintings, there isn't a blue sky showing.

John Leeper, a quiet little man in a yellow bow tie, royal blue sport coat, and grey slacks who works for Corcoran, said he didn't know anything about the skies in France. George H. Hamliton, of the Phillips Gallery of Art, who has a French background and a goatee to prove it, said:

Sky Looks Green

"Well, er-r-r. Sometimes a sky looks a little green, like the water on Lake Michigan."

The exhibit is sponsored by the Hallmark people, who put up $28,000 in prizes. The idea was to come up with some new Christmas scenes which might be used on greeting cards. The artists got their prizes, as advertised, but there is hardly a Christmas scene in the lot.

None of this "over the hills and through the woods" stuff.

You find things in oil which are labeled as church steeples but which look something like telephone poles. There is another thing with a title about Christmas flowers which doesn't have any flowers in it.

Another one shows a small boy looking out of what is supposed to be a frosted window. He has drawn a pig, a fish and a couple of other characters on the window with his fingernails.

Leeper is a little upset.

"Here we have 10,000 people competing for these prizes," he said. "People these days paint for money—not for the love of painting. Grant you, some of these are excellent. Some are not."

He pointed to a picture in oil of a kid wearing a round hat, a black suit with no buttons and beside him two apples and a cherry. There was a sparrow beside the cherry, violating the first rule of any newspaper picture editor. The bird was looking OUT of the scene.

Comic Strip Art

Leeper says he thinks comic strip artists have a slight influence on modern art.

"Not that the people who are turning out art today don't try—they do," he said. "But they take a look at the fast selling comics and wonder how a guy can turn out a daily panel plus a page strip on Sunday. So what happens? They hurry their work. The comic artists are on contract and they don't catch too much thunder if they turn out a stinker once in awhile."

As Leeper looks at it—and his friend Hamilton agreed—the artists of today have a couple of strikes on them in the beginning.

"They don't live today in a creative world," he said. "Things are static."

Leeper said that the life of the creative artist is a rough one in the United States. There aren't many who make a living.
