Coffee Eating Rats Of Hawaii To Get Poison Oats Diet

Honolulu — (U.P.) — The condemned rats of Hawaii's Kona coast will be served 7,000 pounds of rolled oats and no coffee for their last meal.

The rats probably would order coffee if they had their choice but the territorial legislature is paying the bill for the meal and it says definitely not.

For years the caffeine-addicted rodents of the "big island" have feasted on the island's third biggest export crop, Kona coffee growers say the damage runs between $100,000 and $200,000 annually.

Beans in Demand

The growers need the beans because mainland coffee handlers use all they can blend with other products.

This year Kona growers expect slightly under $2,000,000 for the coffee, which tastes like the savory Brazilian bean.

Why the rolled oats? Rats are a wily lot, according to the coffee farmers. A few poisoned beans might catch the more reckless rodents but their brothers would catch on quickly.

Poison to Be Added

So feeding stations will be set up throughout the plantations, about four to six for each acre of cultivated land. Oat-filled pans will be placed at the edge of wasteland or stone piles where the rats hang out between coffee hours.

A week is figured long enough to convince the rabid coffee connoisseurs that oats are more nutritious and delicious. When the converts start paying nightly visits in large numbers for their free meal, the "something new" will be added.

Maybe some will die from over-eating, but the majority will pass on into rodent heaven from the effects of zinc phosphide poisoning.

About 5,800 fish reduction plants in new Japan have an average production capacity of 100 metric tons of fish meal per plant annually.

Red-Haired Timmy Of Pennsylvania Gets Into Trouble

Williamsport, Pa. — (U.P.) — Four-year-old Timmy Chestnut has red hair, a winning smile and a great talent for getting into trouble.

Timmy observed his fourth birthday anniversary by getting his arm caught in his mother's washing machine all the way up to the shoulder. No fracture, but torn ligaments.

Eighteen months ago, he caught the same arm in the same wringer. Before that:

At the age of one, Timmy fell out of a rocking swan and dislocated his shoulder.

Falls Down Stairs

At 16 months he fell down the stairs and knocked out two teeth.

At 19 months he fell into a tub of water. He was revived by artificial respiration. But that was his closest call.

At the age of two, Timmy cut his head badly in a fall in the driveway.

At 30 months he tangled with the washing machine wringer for the first time.

Knocks Self Out

Just before last Christmas Timmy repeated his stair-fall and knocked himself out.

Three weeks later he fell and cut his left eye while pushing a new wagon. It was stitched up.

After that came the fourth birthday observance with the wringer.

His mother, Mrs. Clara E. Chestnut, says he's also had the measles twice and chicken pox once.

The labor force of new Japan currently totals about 38,000,000 persons, or nearly one-half the nation's population of some 82,000,000.
