AND THEN IT RAINED—Hippopotamus lies dead near Lake Rukwa in the Rift Valley of Tanganyika Territory, Africa, where a prolonged drouth became a life and death struggle for a herd of hippos when the lake's 12 feet of water gradually evaporated. In quest of leaves and dry grass, this hippo ventured to the dry shores miles away, and on the way back to the muddy ooze collapsed in the searing heat. Along a 50-mile stretch of shore, 50 dead beasts were counted without searching. After two years, the rains finally came.
