LOG CABIN RESTORED

Prescott, Ariz. (U.P.)—Back in the days before Arizona was a state, the first territorial supreme court was housed here in log cabin known as Fort Miser. The building has been restored and now stands on the Sharlot Hall museum grounds. The ancient cabin is bare, however, and museum curators are searching for old letters, documents, lawbooks and furniture to make the restoration complete.

Swedish Trucks, Cars, Using New Fuel Combination

Stockholm, Sweden (U.P.)—An increasing number of Swedish trucks and passenger cars drive on kerosene and water, and their owners are all happy.

They get more mileage for less fuel cost and a motor that doesn't "knock."

Carl Ahlstedt of Lin Kopling, southern Sweden, has invented a carburetor, called tripol. It can be fixed on any gasoline combustion engine, to run smoothly, fed with 80 per cent kerosene and 20 per cent water.

Gasoline is still necessary to start and warm the motor, however, otherwise, the cylinders would corrode. That is done easily with a button on the instrument board.

No Knock In Motor

A car with a tripol carburetor consumes 30-40 per cent less kerosene than it uses gasoline with a common gas carburetor. Ahlstedt claims after a year of experiments and tests.

The motor doesn't knock, even if the number of revolutions per minute is as low as 200, he said.

Ahlstedt has tested his carburetor by driving a truck 75,000 miles without even five minutes of motor service. The motor was clean inside, almost shiny, he claimed.

Used In War

The principle of using water to increase the effect of a combustion engine has already entered aviation. During the war certain types of fighter plane motors got an "injection" of water. It gave a sudden increase of the motor's strength.

But Ahlstedt still doesn't know why the water makes the motor stronger. He dismisses the theory that the water is split up in its elements, hydrogen and oxygen, because it takes exactly as much energy to split water as is produced when the two elements join again.

He thinks steam makes the combustion in the motor smoother and more complete and increases the octane value of the fuel.

"I'm no theorist," he said. "My carburetor is the result of practical tests."

Trade Commissioner Here from California

M. J. Brown, trade commissioner of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, arrived in Medford today as an emissary of the Los Angeles county during the chamber's trade promotion campaign.

Brown will confer with Jackson County Chamber of Commerce officials while here in an effort to interest local manufacturers in the Los Angeles market and he is also calling on buyers and purchasing agents for department stores and other retail and wholesale outlets to get them to increase their purchases of Los Angeles county's agricultural and industrial products.

Industry Leaders To Hold Conference Here

A two-day industry leaders' conference has been scheduled for April 3 and 4 at the city hall when a team of conference leaders furnished without charge by the National Association of Manufacturers will conduct a series of public relations sessions for 50 leaders of industry, business and the professions in Jackson county.

One of the conference leaders from the NAM is a business economist, who knows the "economic facts of life" and what they mean to the community, and the other is a sales training specialist whose practical methods will help local leaders place the facts before the public, according to the Jackson County Chamber of Commerce which is handling arrangements.

A loose-leaf source book of economic information and speaking aids will be given without charge to each conference participant by NAM. Reservations are being accepted at the chamber office.

Rock Tossed by Boy Fatal to Playmate

Seattle, Mar. 30—(U.P.)—A two-pound stone hurled 40 feet by a schoolboy killed his playmate, the coroner's office reported today.

The victim, Lawrence E. White, 12, died today in Maynard hospital.

The youngster who admitted throwing the stone told a coroner's deputy, "it was just in play."

Lawrence, son of Mr. and Mrs. Newton White, was knocked unconscious yesterday when the stone struck him on the back of the head as he was returning home from the John Muir school.

His parents rushed him to the hospital where he died 12 hours later without recovering consciousness.

Hospital attendants said the victim suffered a fractured skull. The boy's playmate was being questioned again today by coroner's deputies.

Nurse Shortage Seen In Report Of U. N.

Lake Success, (U.P.)—A worldwide shortage of nurses is hampering progress of practically all health programs, according to the World Health organization.

An international investigation by a committee on nursing disclosed that some countries have only one nurse for every 400 persons and others have none for millions of people.

The committee, comprising experts from several countries, including the United States, said that even in highly-organized nations, hospital beds are left unused because of insufficient nurses to care for patients.

The WHO plans a special study of nurses' salaries and working conditions in an effort to make the nursing career more attractive to women.

TRADITION CARRIES ON

Boston (U.P.)—Relatives of the late Mr. and Mrs. Lewis S. B. Jeffers must set dinner plates for the dead couple as long as they live in the Jeffers house. Jeffers, who set a place at the dinner table for his wife for 13 years after her death, insisted in his will that the practice be carried on after he died.

U. S. ENVOY DIES IN PLANE CRASH—Twisted and charred metal is all that remains of the U. S. Embassy C-47 transport which crashed 90 miles south of Ottawa, Canada, killing Laurence A. Steinhardt, U. S. Ambassador to Canada, and four other Americans. The plane had just taken off from Ottawa Airport, en route to New York. The plane's crew chief was the only survivor of the crash.
