

College Grads To Find Employment More Difficult

Atlantic City, N. J., Mar. 30—(U.P.)—College graduates this year are going to have a harder time finding a job than in any year since the end of World War II, Commissioner Ewan Clague of the bureau of labor statistics said today.

In a speech prepared for the American College Personnel association, Clague said many of the 500,000 students, who will graduate from college this spring, will not find the type of jobs for which they were trained.

Not Many Successful
In general, he said, most 1950 graduates will look for professional, semi-professional or administrative jobs. But he said not many would be successful.

The war and postwar shortages in many occupations have been filled, he said. There probably will be fewer openings this year than last or in the first post-war years, he said.

Competition Stiffer
And the size of the graduating class, largest in the nation's history, will make competition even stiffer, he said. Clague predicted that unemployment would increase because the American labor force swells 600,000 to 700,000 workers per year, presenting a challenge to business and industry to expand, use more workers and raise the standards of living.

In some fields, said Clague, there still are plenty of jobs, but other professions are becoming overcrowded.

DIDN'T GET AWAY

Tennille, Ga.—(U.P.)—Stanley Brantley's family verified his fishing story about the one that didn't get away. When a rat annoyed the family by continually scurrying about the flooring, Brantley baited a fish-hook with a piece of chicken gizzard, drilled a hole in the floor, dropped the hook through and caught the rat.
