'Moby Dick' Author Went to Sea Young

Pittsfield, Mass. (U.P.)—A Pittsfield book collector has uncovered evidence that Herman Melville went to sea at 12 and wrote "Moby Dick" from experience, not from book sources.

Samuel T. Sukel has a magazine article of 1835 by a "well-educated young man of Massachusetts, who had been on a whaling voyage." Sukel thinks the young man was Herman Melville.

Melville was 16 when the newly discovered article was published. Sukel claims the author must have signed on at least four years before. Whaling voyages, he said, lasted several years.

First Voyage in 1839

Scholars have placed Melville's first whaling voyage in 1839, when he was 20. They said much of his knowledge of the dangerous sea chase came from books. The latest finding would show that Melville wrote, as did Jack London, of the things he knew.

Sukey sees a striking resemblance between passages in the articles under scrutiny and the novels known to be Melville's.

What's more, he said, Melville deplored in his novels the practice of sending young boys to sea, possibly reflecting his own hard experience.

Play Golf, Live Long Aged Doctor Advises

St. Louis (U.P.)—Dr. Willis Hall, the city's oldest practicing physician, has two tips on longevity on his 93rd birthday.

The doctor, who began practicing medicine in 1881, advised:

One—take up golf when you are 40, and play it regularly for 50 years.

Two—come from a family of long-lived people.

Dr. Hall was a real golfing fan until an attack of sciatica forced him off the links two years ago. Now his exercising is restricted to gardening and short walks.

At 93, the physician is close to the family pace in the matter of longevity. Two of his uncles lived to be 94 and 95.

Big Winds Put Radio Station Off Airlanes

Salt Lake City (U.P.) — A big wind put radio station KALL of Salt Lake City off the air for a while.

Telephone calls deluged the studio. But the one that announcer Nelson Hall remembers is the call from a woman who wanted to know:

"Why didn't you announce the cause of the trouble over the radio so I wouldn't have had to call you up?"

France Leads Western World In Growing Young, Expert Discloses

Paris—(U.P.)—France, after 50 years of growing old faster than any nation in the world, now leads the western world in growing young.

A population expert, Alfred Sauvy, director of the Institute of Demographic Studies, points out that France's birth rate, averaging 850,000 yearly for the last four years, now outstrips that of any other western nation.

France has gained an average of 320,000 population yearly through the surplus of births over deaths.

Before the war the situation was in reverse. The average yearly birth rate was 650,000 and France actually was losing population.

France was like a sinking ship," Sauvy said in an interview. "Her birth rate was so low that the young generations were unable to replace the old in the life of the country."

More Time Needed

But even with the post-war spurt in the birthrate, more time is needed to solve France's population problem. Before the French revolution in 1789, there was one old person for 15 young. Today there is one old for five young.

The fact that France still is an old nation has a political implication which most people miss, Sauvy said. In the next general election, not later than the end of next year, the voters' age will look like this:

21 to 40 years of age—39 per cent of eligibles.

41 to 60 years of age—38 per cent of eligibles.

Over 60—23 per cent of eligibles.

"The majority of the voters will be over 40," Sauvy said. "They will tend to be more conservative than the young.

"A parliament elected by old voters tends to be old itself, and the same goes for the government."

Reasons Varied

The reasons for the changes in France's number one pre-war problem, growing old, are varied, Sauvy said.

"Among them are government subsidizing of births through family allowances and bonuses, the defeat of France in 1940 by a young, vigorous German army, the desire for revenge," he said.

"An average French family used to have two children. Now the average has risen to nearly three."

According to Sauvy, the hopes for a continuation of the present trend, even though the rate of increase falls off, rest with the continuation of the present family allowances — government payments of a certain amount monthly for each child under 21, regardless of the family's financial status.

"Rejuvenation of a nation is more expensive than machinery renewal," he commented.

FALSE ALARM

Greenfield, Mo. — (U.P.) — The fire siren sounded shortly after midnight. It kept on sounding during a severe thunderstorm. Citizens turned out to fight a major conflagration. They found that the lightning had short-circuited the fire.
