Eagle Point Man's Son Dies in Wreck

Orange, Tex., Apr. 10—Lee McAlpin, 20, and his wife, Billie, 17, of Beaumont, Tex., died in the back seat of a flaming automobile near here Sunday after the car had been hit by a train.

The dead girl's brother, John Harvey, 20, and his girl friend, Lois Harmon, 17, were thrown clear of the car but were critically hurt, it was said.

Edgar J. Harvey, father of the dead girl, suffered hand burns in a vain attempt to rescue the couple as the girl's mother and Miss Harmon's parents stood helplessly by.

Lee McAlpin is the son of Neil McAlpin, Eagle Point, it was reported today. The older man has been residing at the home of his sister, Mrs. H. C. Short. The Eagle Point people said they learned today that the Harmon girl had died.

Alex Builds His Own

It is building time now as well as growing time, and rare is the man without the itch to take out of the house and go for one chore or the other. In tune with the season, I'm trying to use this space for a spell to provide aid and comfort for build-itchy readers.

So we come to young Alex Ellenbacher, Hungarian born, now a factory hand in New Jersey, and his new house with living room, kitchen, dinette, bath, two bedrooms, full basement and a large attic in which more bedrooms can be made.

Reader's Digest tells that the house was all built by Alex and his wife with their own hands, except for installation of plumbing, heating, wiring and application of plaster. They spent $8,600, and have a house appraised at $14,000.

Mr. Ellenbacher was a building greenhorn at the start. How, then, did he even begin?

Dress-Pattern House

Several times in this column news notes have been given on the fact that most retail lumber dealers keep in stock a pile of patterns for the building of all sorts of useful and ornamental objects of wood. These patterns serve the amateur woodworker and builder much as clothing patterns serve the home dressmaker. Most retail lumber dealers sell the patterns. One, No. 910, is for a two-bedroom home. The Ellenbachers knew where and how to begin after securing Pattern 910, because it told what tools to get, and what materials, with directions on the position of every piece of lumber in the house and on marking and cutting each one. No question of the kind was left unanswered. The amateur was even told how to buy materials as needed, a package each week or so.

Two years seems to be the average time that such a "build yourself" project takes. In terms of man-hours' cost, the savings over employing contractors and carpenters are no great shakes. The thing is that with Alex, as with other cases I can name, the financial situation was such that it was build themselves in spare time or have no new home at all.

Thus, self-building does not lose jobs and wages for people of the building trades but makes more jobs and wages. Such projects call for some skilled craftsmen at various stages. Without the self-building these calls would not come.
