Radio Patter by Pat

Jack McElroy
If you've been wondering what that "ace of a ton of fat and fun" looks like, now you know for here's a picture of Jack McElroy. Jovial Jack McElroy gives a hearty welcome to housewives of the nation on his "Welcome to Hollywood" program every week day at 1 p.m. over Station KYJC and ABC. McElroy is married and the father of three children. It's Jack McElroy who does the vocalizing on the "Bride & Groom" program heard each week day over KYJC at 2:30 p.m.

The American business man's daily contact with the U. S. department of defense will provide the documentary theme for the department's official weekly ABC program, "Time for Defense" on tonight's broadcast over Station KYJC at 8 o'clock.

"Do we have an alternative to the cold war?" This will be the question up for discussion when ABC's "America's Town Meeting" is broadcast from Charlottesville, Va., tonight at 9 o'clock.

Participants in the broadcast will be Marquis W. Childs, author and nationally syndicated columnist for United Features; Clarence Street, president, Federal Union, Inc., member of the board of the Atlantic union committee and author of "Union Now"; and Sen. Ralph E. Flanders (R., Vt.) member of the senate banking and currency committee.

Don't forget the frost warning tonight and every night over Station KYJC at 8 o'clock.

Among the Madi people of Central Africa the friends of a prospective bridegroom give him many presents to help defray the expense of buying his bride from her father.

Your Health and Its Care

By DR. WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.
Readers should address inquiries to: Dr. William Brady, 263 El Camino, Beverly Hills, Calif.

IT DOESN'T STAY LONG IN THE NOSE

Although the subject, today, is the nose—and what people do to it—I can't resist a preliminary mention of the out and what throat and what gargles do to it. The idea in gargling seems to be that disease-causing germs may be lodged in the tonsils and adjacent areas of the throat and that these may be routed by taking a swig of something, drawing a deep breath, throwing the head back and saying "gug-gug-gug" as long as the breath lasts.

Dr. Brady

What is actually accomplished by this? The answer is—nothing whatever. The gargle gets no farther back than the molar teeth. That excludes the entire throat. Even if the gargle did get back into the throat—what would happen? Nothing whatever.

Germs don't huddle on the surface like people waiting for a street car on the corner, but are distributed "underground" as well as superficially. You could squirt something at the tonsils and throat all day long without disturbing a "underground" germ. True enough, you could wash away some of the surface germs, a matter of very little importance. If applying antiseptics to an infected area really did the business, the need for antibiotic drugs would diminish considerably.

The best known of the modern "miracle drugs" is penicillin. It may be used in the form of a powder, or incorporated in a liquid. The presence of penicillin, in sufficient quantity, makes it difficult or impossible for certain disease-causing germs to survive in the tissues. Powerful as its action is, upon these germs, it is harmless to the tissues which they inhabit. Penicillin is not an antiseptic. It is an antibiotic—something considerably different. If penicillin is kept in close contact with an open, infected area, the germs which caused the infection, if they are of the class which is sensitive to penicillin, desist from their nefarious activity. In a few instances, such a direct application, if constantly maintained, will cure the infectious process.

The lining of the nose is provided with microscopic "cilia," hair-like process which "wave" or vibrates about seven times per second. Their function is to "wave away" any foreign particles on the surface. Obviously, they can not wave away anything lying below the surface. If penicillin, either in powder or liquid form, is sprayed into the nose, it is promptly removed by the cilia. If oil is deposited in the nose, the action of the cilia is impeded and a longer time is required for its disposal.

An infection of the lining of the nose which may be susceptible to the action of penicillin, can be affected by penicillin only to the extent that the drug can be kept in contact with the lining. That goes for every other drug as well as penicillin. Despite the fact that the cilia promptly remove the drug, it has been used, in medical hands, for its local effect. There are several proprietary devices on the market which are used in depositing penicillin within the nose. There are also several products available which provide penicillin in liquid form.

It now appears that the public is using these devices and products, without medical advice or guidance, on a wide scale. They are used, often, for infections which are not susceptible to the action of penicillin, as for instance, CRI, or the "common cold." With the exception of occasional severe allergic reactions, this practice may be harmless enough with one exception. The constant use of these substances may so accustom the user to their action that when some dire necessity arises for their life-saving effect, they are found to be powerless.

The friendly and well-meaning druggist who dispenses these drugs, in any form, to the patient without prescription, is hardly doing the patient a favor. And the patient who seeks to bypass the physician is being too smart for his own good.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Where in the United States would the humidity remain low during the next part of the year? (Mrs. E. C. McLa.)
Answer—New Mexico, Arizona, Southern California.
Baby's Bowels
Having had so much trouble with my first baby's bowels, I am baffled as to what procedure to follow for my second baby, now 6 months old. (Mrs. P. M.)
Answer—This is a little late, but the best policy is to leave the baby's bowels alone. Send twenty-five cents to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

and stamped self-addressed envelope for a copy of THE NEW BRADY BABY BOOK.

Ridged, brittle or spooned nails. Have noticed my nails getting ridged, crosswise, very easily broken and sort of concave. (E. L.)

Answer—Nutritional deficiency often manifests itself like that. Send stamped self-addressed envelope and ask for pamphlet YOUNG FOLKS AND OLD FOLKS. Remember it takes three or four months for new nails to grow, so if you supplement your diet with the three minerals and three vitamins you must keep it up for three or four months at least. You can't expect to notice much improvement within two or three months. (Copyright 1950 by John F. Dille Co.)
