

Atlanta Children Building Up Fund For New Elephant

Atlanta (U.P.)—Children here have a heart cavity measuring the dimensions of their departed Coca, who was given the great sleep to end her suffering.

The entire country was interested in press accounts of Coca's demise. Now it is worth recording that Coca may be replaced.

Minus an elephant because of the mercy killing, Atlanta wants another.

Nickels and dimes, candy and comic book money, are trickling in to buy a new elephant. Coca's stall out at the zoo looks too bleak and bare not to be filled.

Parents Dig Up

Disturbed children are forcing their parents to poke into the family wallet for the $4,000 needed for a replacement.

This has been a hard-luck home for elephants. Ten died during the war when a circus herd got arsenic in its feed by accident.

A mysterious ailment struck Coca in her right foreknee. Pain was so great that her three-ton bulk had to be supported by the left leg.

Coca's hide was so tough that a portable X-ray machine could get no results. She balked at going to the hospital.

Finally, Coca took a few brave steps out of her stall and fell. Every available cure was tried.

Death Decided

Death, thought more merciful than agony, was the decision. A veterinarian sank a needle into the giant ear.

It contained a dose of potassium cyanide, enough to kill 500 persons. Coca groaned and died.

Now the drive is on for a new one. Contribution pots have been placed about town. Both local papers are sponsoring the move.
