AROUND HOLLYWOOD

By VIRGINIA MacPHERSON United Press Correspondent

Hollywood, Apr. 17.—(U.P.)—If Senator Johnson plans to investigate every film star with a secret past he'd better look up Tex Williams first. This cowboy crooner's been leading a double life for years.

Practically any western fan can tell you that Tex is doing a little right making movies, records, and television shows.

But he has a habit of sneaking off between public appearances for hours at a time. Nobody knows where he goes or what he does.

Mysterious young ladies visit his house. Tex never tells who they are.

He even got caught once—in a pretty blonde's bedroom. But that didn't slow him down one bit. His wife didn't even rush to tell it to the judge.

It was because that pretty young blonde was three years old. And her bedroom was in a hospital for crippled children.

When Tex sneaks away from reporters he's on his way to a polio ward to sing and chat with the tiny victims propped up in braces and traction splints.

And those "mysterious" young ladies who call on him usually get there in wheel chairs.

This is the dark secret in Williams' private life. And up to now, he wouldn't talk about it to anybody but his wife and a few close pals.

"I don't even know why I'm a-doin' it now," he drawled. "I never let the newspapers print it up because I don't want anybody to think I'd use these little kids for publicity."

Once Polio Patient
Tex is Hollywood's one-man "March of Dimes." He can talk to crippled tots in their own language. And that's something else he had kept secret.

"But I talk about it to the kids," he said. "I sit by their
