Dr. Elmo N. Stevenson, president of Southern Oregon college, spoke on "Understanding Your Child." He said that parents can provide certain security and pleasant surroundings to prepare children for an unknown future, and teachers and parents should work together in developing the child's personal potentialities. Dr. Stevenson stated that we need to know the nature of a youngster in order that we can mold him toward an objective, that many parents misunderstand children. The speaker said parents should be sure children receive enough praise and approbation.

According to Dr. Stevenson, the school's function 50 years ago was to teach the three R's, but that some of the things a school should provide today are outdoor life, adventure by means of field trips and excursions, conferences among the children, and a code of ethics such as is provided in Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts. He said that he believes it is much better to have supervised dances than having teenagers going to roadhouses. Dr. Stevenson stressed the fact that elementary teaching is still a good field for young people to enter, and said "We should have the finest type of persons in the teaching game; it is encouraging to have more men in teacher education."
