Minister Chased From Portland Store

Rev. Lesley E. Kell told police he entered the store of Hugh E. Parrish, 52, to inquire about renting a house from him. Parrish allegedly told the minister he was not running a real estate office and ordered him to get out.
Kell said Parrish fired a shot at him as he left.
Police took Parrish into custody after Parrish assertedly leveled a cocked and loaded rifle at Patrolman Ladd Hunt.
