Radio Patter by Pat

"The Lone Ranger" comes to the rescue and even risks his own life in tonight's episode to be broadcast over KYJC at 7 o'clock. It seems there is a bad feeling between the freighters and the railroad men. An attempt is made to wreck the new road here's where the "Lone Ranger" comes in... horse and all in the adventure titled "The Silver Trail."

OLD HABITS—Charles Hinkley (above), 26, habitual criminal who risked his life recently in a delicate brain operation to end his tendency to steal, apparently failed to find a new personality. Hinkley is back in jail in Greenfield, Mass., after he fled in hospital in Topeka, Kas., and left a trail of bad checks from Kansas to Massachusetts.

Bids Accepted for Hatchery Construction
Portland, Ore., Apr. 26—(U.P.) The state game commission today announced it had accepted low bids for construction work at trout hatcheries at Medford, Hood River, Oakridge, the Metolus river and Bend.
A $50 by 100 foot concrete holding pond will be constructed at the Butte Falls hatchery near Medford by Henry Den-Herder for $9,948.

Woman Injured When Auto Runs Into Truck
Grants Pass, Ore., Apr. 26—(U.P.)—Esther Hurst, 30, suffered severe face and throat lacerations when her car rammed into the rear of a stalled lumber truck three miles north of Grants Pass at midnight Monday.
The truck was operated by Roy H. Linn, Myrtle Creek. Miss Hurst was taken to Josephine County General hospital for treatment.

END OF SEA SEARCH—Coast Guard cutter Chataquet (background) arrives to take the disabled tugboat Omar in tow 525 miles southwest of San Francisco, ending eight days of air and sea search of waters between the mainland and Hawaii. The drifting vessel was first sighted by a Coast Guard search plane.

Your Health and Its Care

Readers should address inquiries to: Dr. William Brady, 265 El Camino, Beverly Hills, Calif.

INSIDE DOPE ON BLOOD PRESSURE

A very determined lady sat at the doctor's desk, and in response to his question as to what he could do for her, thrust out her arm and commanded, "Take my blood pressure." The doctor, hesitated then said: "If the information would be of real value to you I'd do it. But, first, tell me what is bothering you."

To cut it short—the lady swept out of the office abruptly. The professor from the liberal arts college ignored a receptionist, several clerks, interns and nurses and walking into the university hospital laboratory demanded of any and all within hearing distance that he be given a "cholesterol test." The pathologist looked up from his microscope and recognizing the professor said, patiently, "If you need attention, please report to the receptionist. She will explain the routine to you."

When the heart contracts, the blood pressure is momentarily higher than when the heart is resting—or filling. The blood pressure "reading" thus involves two figures: That concerned with the pressure registered at the peak of the heart's contraction and that concerned with the lower pressure recorded while the heart is resting. The average person who wants to know what his blood pressure is, would be confused if the doctor mentioned both figures.

Inevitably there would follow a raft of questions—all of which, however, interesting to the patient, would have no direct bearing upon a plan of procedure against his illness. The relation of one figure to the other and the significance of either figure would be matters about which the patient could form no opinion. Why then should the patient bother about it?
If a person suspects that his "blood pressure" is giving him trouble, the intelligent thing for him to do is to go to a doctor and state his complaint. He wastes the doctor's time—and his own—by suggesting his reasons for thinking "it might be his blood pressure."
The word that his blood pressure is "average" or "low," should be sufficient to satisfy a patient. If he is told it is "high," that in itself should be sufficient without demanding to know the figures involved. Informing the patient could not understand anyway. A patient who has "high blood pressure" is not treated for high blood pressure but for the disease which is causing it. High blood pressure is not a disease in itself. Rather it is an effect of underlying disease.
Outside of spending his money, a patient who, on his own, frequently cajoles a doctor into "taking his blood pressure," accomplishes nothing. He just has a notion—a very fuzzy one. Any
