

Citizens of Umatilla Pleased At Chance To Hear President

Umatilla, Ore., May 11—(U.P.)—The big black train from the east steamed into the little railroad station here last night and the high school band began tooting uncertainly the strains of "Hail to the Chief."

"Where is he?" screamed a young Boy scout in full regalia as burly state police whipped around the end of the train with lengths of fresh manila rope.

"Stand back from the end of the train—it may stop suddenly," shouted a man from the rear platform of the most famous railroad car in the country.

Doors Swing Open
Before the train stopped, the doors of the cars ahead swung open and photographers, reporters and secret service agents began bailing out. Experience enabled them to his the roadbed at just about the point where the last car would come to a stop.

"Stand back," roared the local chief of police as he braced against the rope, against which pushed the most active portion of the Umatilla population.

As the brakes of the train grabbed harshly on the spinning wheels and steam hissed from the side of the train, there emerged through blue velvet curtains on the rear car the man everybody came to see—the president of the United States.

"Hi ya, Harry," shouted several people in the crowd.

"Pour it on," whooped one old man who looked like he hadn't shaved in a month.

President Grins
The president grinned and went immediately into a hand waving oration about what he thought was best for the nation.

About six secret service agents edged out through the fringes of the crowd, not so much to protect the president as to keep the onlookers from getting too close to the crushing wheels of the big Baltimore and Ohio special from Washington.

At Umatilla, as at every stop through the northwest, Mr. Truman in a cracker-barrel style made famous in 1948, assured the people that he was not "running for anything." On this trip, Mr. Truman said, he is out to report to the people as their "hired man" in the White House.

But, he added, in so to voice that he'd be back out here again "this season" to do "a little politicking."

Glad To Be in Umatilla
The president ended up with how glad he was to be in Umatilla. Then with a grand sweep of his left hand he brought out the two star performers of his trip—his wife in a blue dress, and his singing daughter, Margaret, in a brilliant green gown. "Meet the boss," said the president as Mrs. Truman, patting down her stylish hair-do came through the curtain.

"And here's Margie," he said with a perfect master of ceremonies gesture toward the curtain. Margaret emerged and gave her best concert stage wave.

"Sing us a song, Margaret," belloped one man in a red lumberjack shirt from the track-side.

But before Margaret could so much as peep the first bar from one of her favorite operatic arias the president, in the best carnival manner, had waved her and Mrs. Truman back inside the blue curtain.

An unkind white light from overhead floods beat down on the chief executive's grey hair.

"Thanks very much for your kind reception here," he said. A warning whistle tooted shrilly, sending the reporters and the secret service men hustling back aboard the train.

The big diesel engines far ahead pulled away toward the next stop.

420,000 Ducks, Geese Killed by Oregonians

Portland, Ore., May 11—(U.P.)—

An estimated 420,000 ducks and geese were killed by Oregon hunters during the 1949 waterfowl season, according to data released today by Bill Morse, chief of waterfowl for the state game commission.

Morse said the estimate was based on duck stamp sales and surveys made by game agents in Oregon. In addition, Morse said data showed 9,000 birds were not retrieved by hunters.
