Who builds a church within his heart
And takes it with him everywhere,
Is holier far than he whose church is but a one-day house of prayer.
—MORRIS ABEL REEF.

(Above quoted because of an urgent request from a number of clients to occasionally quote a poem that does not deal with the subject of love.)

"Haircuts repaired." That's a sign I recall seeing on a barber-shop in San Francisco. There should be haircut repair shops everywhere. I recently took a chance on a barber other than the one who regularly cuts my hair and he certainly did things to my manly dome. I have a haircut that is badly in need of repair. Only about one out of ten barbers in this country really knows his business. The best barbers are natives of Italy who started as apprentices in the old country.

Please Note.
You seldom encounter a doctor or surgeon of forty years of age or over who is a bachelor. Doctors and surgeons think that unless they are married people will not have confidence in their wisdom. Nurses make the best wives for doctors and surgeons.

Asking.
Queries from clients. Q. There has been a slightly heated argument at our house as to who started in the film version of the novel, "Black Oxen." A. None other than the beautiful Corinne Griffith starred in the picture you mention, based on Gertrude Atherton's best seller. It dealt with rejuvenation treatments. Seems it would stand a revival, considering the interest the feminine sex has in that subject. Q. Are you familiar with a poem written about men born under the sign of Sagittarius? A. Never heard of a complete poem about male Sagittarians. However, the following is an excerpt from Lucille Anderson's brilliant poem titled "Love by the Zodiac":

Virgo's a dud on details you know
He smarter than he is, but don't let it show.
The Sagittarius male is a hunter of game
Life with him, darling, will never be tame.

Over the Bridge.
In Brooklyn there is an organization known as "The Perfect Housewife's Institute." The members meet regularly to listen to lectures on the various phases of home management in order to improve their house-keeping technique. Incidentally, Brooklyn was the first place to have a school in which a course was offered for "expectant fathers." Idea of this was, of course, to prepare a young husband to be of some help around the house before and after a blessed event.

Briefly.
Harry Richman, veteran night spot entertainer, who owns a ranch in Nevada, may open a club in Reno. Not a night club but one featuring gambling. Las Vegas, Nev., claims to be the only city in the U.S.A. having a woman dog catcher. The lady's name is Mrs. Adele Oberman. They shouldn't refer to her as a dog catcher but as a "canine control officer." My favorite quartet number is not "Sweet Adeline," neither it is "Down By the Old Mill Stream." It is that song titled "Dear Old Girl." You know, the old time ballad beginning "Dear old girl, the robins sing about you."

Passing By.
Rose Marie Reid, bathing suit designer from California. Specializes in bathing suits for women with average and "difficult" figures. Has designed sixty-seven different styles for women who have not been blessed by nature with an Esther Williams figure. Miss Reid may have the answer to the question so seriously considered by many women at this time of the year, namely: "How are you going to look in a bathing suit?"

Horses & Women.
I have never received so many compliments on anything I have worn as this hat. I overheard an evidently much pleased woman make that remark. This reveals how much women enjoy compliments. Keep this in mind, gentlemen. However, do not make the compliment too obvious. The subtle compliment is what will most advance your interests with an object of your affections. Or so state our Horses & Women experts.

Oil Industry Eyes Aid of Caterpillars

Philadelphia (U.P.)—The highly mechanized oil industry still finds work for the humble caterpillar.

G. E. Evans, marketing expert for Esso of New York told a meeting of the Oil Heat Institute of America that the woolly caterpillar may be used by the industry to help determine long-range weather trends, in conjunction with weather forecasts and meteorologists.

"The past winter was 13 per cent warmer than normal," he said, "creating a lesser demand for fuel oil." He said that to relate production with demand, the caterpillar and the other means of predicting the severity of winters will be used.

According to tradition, when the "woolly bear" caterpillar grows a long coat of hair, a cold winter lies ahead.

Gradual Punishment Urged for Youngsters

Bar Harbor, Me. (U.P.)—Punish your children gradually, not all at once.

That's the advice of Dr. Emil Fredericson of the Roscoe B. Jackson Memorial Laboratory.

He bases his suggestion on the results of experiments with puppies. Puppies isolated in a small box for 10 minutes yelped more than those put in the box in a series of 10 distributed one-minute periods. The puppies who took their punishment in one large dose yelped an average of 1,103 times where those whose punishment was gradual averaged only 347 yelps.

Dr. Fredericson said the experiments indicate "that experience in emotionally disturbing situations can be much more severe if the situation is imposed on the organism without giving it a chance to recover occasionally."

Fish Chumming Charge Innocent Plea Entered

Walter Ray Allen, Eagle Point, has pleaded innocent in justice court on a charge of chumming game fish and has demanded a jury trial. Justice of the Peace W. P. Tucker said today. The case has been continued for hearing and no date for the trial has been set.

The crime of chumming involves the act of attracting fish to the fisherman by sowing the water with fish food.

N. Y. Hotel Public Relations Lady Learns Work Troubles are Varied

New York (U.P.)—Touring the town for a black lace nightie or finding a socially-acceptable skunk for the U. S. Navy all are in the day's work for Mrs. Wilona Allen.

Mrs. Allen, an attractive, middle-aged widow, says the Commodore Hotel didn't hire her eight years ago specifically for such assignments. All they told her was, "Keep our guests happy and coming back."

As guest relations director, most of the time she plans tours for residents, finds baby-sitters when needed, helps with guest shopping problems, or finds rooms in other hotels in case the Commodore is at capacity.

But many weird requests come her way. Like finding the black nightgown and the deodorized skunk.

Fast Action Needed.
Her problem with the black gown started when a young man dashed up to her in her lobby quarters, slapped a $100 note on the desk, and wailed, "You gotta help me."

"I've been in town four days," he explained. "Before I left home I promised my wife whatever I did I'd bring back a black nightie. She wears a size nine."

"To complicate things," Mrs. Allen said, "He was catching a plane in 45 minutes. Well, you can imagine how hasty my shopping had to be. But I made it... with three minutes to go."

"He didn't get much change back from his $100," she said, "but he looked happy. I hope his wife was."

There was the time a flustered Navy officer marched up to her desk during the war and asked, "where can I find a skunk that's socially acceptable?"

"Our ship's mascot died," he explained, "and I'm supposed to find a replacement before I report back to duty."

Mrs. Allen located the animal at a pet shop.

Mrs. Allen has played cupid more times than she can count. Once a young sailor shuffled up to her desk and asked, "Mrs. Allen, have you seen a blonde wandering around here like she was looking for someone?"

He explained, "I met her 18 months ago while I was on leave. We had a couple of happy days doing the town, fell in love, got engaged, and I shipped out."

Some Are Bored.
"Now," he said, "I'm supposed to meet her here and we're going to get married. But I can't remember what she looks like."

Mrs. Allen tries to help guests like this one. But sometimes, she says, it's difficult to be polite to some of them who wander by.

There was the elderly, slightly bald man who bent her ear an entire morning with his marital woes and was winding up for the afternoon when she asked him to shut up.

She said: "His wife had packed up six months earlier, taken the two kids and gone home to mother... after 20 years of marriage. His problem was—should he try to get her back."

"He was such a bore," Mrs. Allen said, "I wondered how the wife stood him as long as she had."

Borough Manager, 22 Also Runs Community

Clark's Summit, Pa. (U.P.)—When many fellows his age are voting for the first time, 22-year-old B. Richard Wenner already is running a community.

Wenner is the new manager of the borough of Clark's Summit, Pa., population 3,500. The former farm boy is no newcomer to public affairs, either. In June, 1948, soon after his 21st birthday, he became manager of Bloomsburg and held the job until early this year.

Wenner was graduated from Bloomsburg High School in 1944 and the University of Pennsylvania in 1947.
