Letter to a Blood Donor I'll Never Know...

RED CROSS
WASHINGTON, D. C.
I got mine in Korea—and I'm writing this to you because I'll never know who the person was that gave blood to save my life.

Whoever you are—thanks. I guess what I'm trying to say is thanks to say and every American who gave blood. And I guess the best way really to thank you is to do for the next guy what you did for me. So as soon as I get out of the hospital here I'll stop by and give some blood myself.

Yours sincerely,

Students Awarded Scholastic Keys For Art Entries

Two Medford Senior High school students, Miss Celia Clogston and Miss Doris Powell, have been awarded gold keys by Scholastic Magazine for outstanding achievement in art. The competition is an annual one for student artists.

Miss Clogston, a junior in the school, won two gold key awards, both on watercolor paintings. Miss Powell, a senior, won a gold key for a tempera painting, an abstraction of a chair. The three paintings will now be sent to Pittsburgh, Pa., to be judged in the national contest with winners from other states.

The two students and Miss Jacqueline Rosling, city schools art supervisor, drove to Portland for the award ceremony. They attended the opening of the James Edward Peck exhibit at Ruthmore galleries and viewed the Scholastic exhibit in Meier and Frank's store. They also toured art galleries and museums in Portland in addition to attending the award ceremony. Gold keys and certificates of merit were awarded by Dr. Rex Putnam, state superintendent of public instruction, and Mayor Dorothy McCullough Lee.
