Edison Workshop Preserved In Ford's Michigan Museum

Dearborn, Mich. — (U.P.) — If Thomas Alva Edison were alive today, he could sit at his original work bench, pick up a cigar he lighted in 1929, and work with the same tools he used in 50 unsurpassed years of invention. A material record of America's greatest inventor, who died Oct. 18, 1931, is painstakingly preserved here at Henry Ford's 250-acre Greenfield Village. Most of the objects lie where Edison left them.

Ford, who as a young man drew much encouragement from Edison in his work on the "horseless carriage," acquired the inventor's entire Menlo Park, N.J., laboratory and transported it here.

Brick by brick, chair by chair and chemical bottle by chemical bottle, all four buildings and their contents are arranged here exactly as they were in Menlo Park. The boarding house of Mrs. Sarah Jordan, where Edison's assistants lived, stands across the road from the original laboratory building. It was the first home ever lighted by electricity. Edison's first visit to Dearborn was in 1929, the 50th anniversary of the invention of the incandescent electric light.

The light, made with a carbonized sewing thread for a filament, still burns. Tucked away in a corner of his laboratory is Edison's first patented invention, an electrographic voice recorder, and a flop as far as immediate acceptance was concerned.

Edison took the machine to Washington in 1888 but congressmen were unimpressed. "Nice machine you have there," they told him, "but how can we filibuster if all you have to do is press a button?"

Queen Bestows Medal On Korean War Hero

London—(U.P.)—Queen Elizabeth II, in the first semi-public state function since the death of her father, pinned the Victoria Cross Wednesday on the breast of a nervous Korean War Hero, Pvt. William Speakman, 24.

The slim young sovereign, dressed in a simply-cut black dress as a mark of her mourning, also dubbed 55 new knights of her realm with the tap of a gleaming sword on their shoulders.

It was the first royal investiture—the formal investing of persons honored in royal "honors lists"—since the death of the 25-year-old queen's father, King George VI, February 6.

Edward Robinson Jr.
Confident Exam Passed
Hollywood—(U.P.)—Edward G. Robinson Jr. was confident Wednesday that Uncle Sam would gladly give him a home even if his father, famed tough-guy actor Edward G. Robinson, would not.

The 18-year-old son of the movie star took his pre-induction physical examination Tuesday and said he was sure he passed it with flying colors. He predicted he would be called soon by his draft board.

Film Starlet Must Save 15 Per Cent of Earnings
Hollywood—(U.P.)—Pert movie starlet Joyce Holden must try to get along without 15 per cent of her $225 weekly paycheck—for the time being, at least.

Superior Judge Frank G. Swain approved the 20-year-old actress' new movie contract Tuesday but turned a deaf ear to her pleas to stop saving 15 per cent of her earnings. The court ordered her to save the money when her first contract was approved.
