

Adults Must Retain Sense of Balance In Handling Youth

Editor's note: President Milton S. Eisenhower of Pennsylvania State College and outstanding members of his faculty have written a series of articles discussing "Teenage Troubles." They deal with youthful delinquency and what may be done to combat the problem. The first, by a professor of education at Pennsylvania State College follows:

By PAUL BIXBY

State College, Pa.—(U.P.)—"Our earth is degenerate in these latter days . . . children no longer obey their parents."

"The children now love luxury. They have bad manners, contempt for authority. They show disrespect for elders, and love chatter in place of exercise. They no longer rise when elders enter the room. They contradict their parents, chatter before company, and tyrannize over their teachers."

Discouraging, isn't it? So thought the Egyptian priest of 4000 B.C. who is quoted in the first paragraph.

And that's Socrates speaking in the second paragraph.

Adds to Concern

Each newspaper release indicating new waves of petty crimes by modern youngsters adds to our concern and discouragement. Of course, we must be concerned by these stories. As grown-ups with the interests of youngsters and tomorrow's society at heart we must never be satisfied as long as any child anywhere is physically, socially or in any other way maladjusted. But we must at the same time keep our perspective and our sense of balance. The youth of today need that from us most of all.

As troubled adults we must be careful not to use "youth" as a scapegoat for conditions we are unable to manage in our adult world. No one seems to argue seriously that better social adjustment—call it better citizenship, if you wish—is not one of our persistent problems in helping children grow up. It is in our discussion on how it shall best be done that we generate "atomic heat."

Surely there must be many "all-right" ways of raising children. One has only to associate with the youth of today to be impressed with the poised, resourceful, fair-minded generation our hodge-podge methods have produced.

Approach Urged

Dr. James Plant, former director of the Essex County Juvenile Clinic in New Jersey and a man who devoted his life to helping children in trouble, often urged those parents and teachers who worked closely with him to adopt a "public health" approach in dealing with children's behavior problems. If the boy in trouble could speak in our grown-up language he might say:

"I'm not so much the bad boy as I am the weak boy. What's wrong is not wrong with me alone but with all my contemporaries. They have so far been strong enough not to succumb to the pressures of our world of childhood. Alleviate the conditions that cause my trouble or more children will follow me to your news headlines and your rehabilitation centers."

Adults To Blame

Who are to blame for children in trouble? Individually and as a society we adults must share the responsibility. What can we do about it?

Dr. Plant suggests that we accept the child in trouble as the product of his environment and seek with him to locate and change the causes of his maladjustment rather than blindly treat the symptoms.

In addition, there must be the willingness and the machinery on the community level to tackle the roots of children's difficulties as the public health approach exposes them, and so prevent unacceptable behavior in others.

Automobile Firebug Hunted in Portland

Portland—(U.P.)—Fire investigators Monday were looking into the possibility that a firebug with a peculiar liking for automobiles was at work in Portland after three car fires were reported within one hour.

Firemen were summoned to extinguish a blaze in the front seat of a car parked on a street at 1:11 a.m. Fourteen minutes later a fire was reported in another parked automobile. This blaze also was in the front seat. The third fire, reported 40 minutes later, was in the front seat of a pickup truck owned by Mike DeCicco. The pickup was parked about five blocks from the other two cars.

Rain-Making Measure Due in Legislature

The Dalles, Ore.—(U.P.)—A bill creating a five-man board to regulate artificial rain-making in Oregon will be submitted to the next legislature by the legislative interim committee on weather control.

Announcement of the committee's intentions was made here Saturday after a public hearing on weather control held in Arlington. Another hearing had been held earlier this month in Medford.

E. M. Nelson, committee secretary and Wasco county extension agent, said the bill would provide for the regulating board to be drawn from existing state agencies.

Three Wrecks Too Much; Autoist Takes to Feet

Baytown, Tex.—(U.P.)—Three wrecks in two months' time was too much for Emmett Belcher.

He was unhurt when his car overturned on a highway and was demolished. Belcher was also unhurt in a wreck in which two men were injured seriously.

Two days later Belcher escaped unscathed in a two-car collision.

"I'm not pushing my luck any farther," he said. "From now on I'm walking."
