

STRIKE POSTPONED—Phil Murray (right), C.I.O. president, is interviewed by reporters at Washington, D. C., after steel workers postponed their threatened strike following the Government's Wage Stabilization Board's recommendation of a 17½ hourly wage increase for them. Murray told reporters that if no agreement is reached with the steel industry there will be a strike on the evening of April 8.

SON'S STEALING SHOULD BE TREATED IMPERSONALLY

Q "My 10 year old son recently took some money from his dad's pocketbook. My husband doesn't know about it yet. My son spent some of the money on candy and gave the rest to schoolmates. When I discovered it, we had a heart-to-heart talk about stealing and my son promised to repay the money with his earnings, with a confession and apology. Have I done right by my boy's future by placing him on his honor and by not inflicting any further punishment at this time? What course should my husband pursue when he is confronted with the money and the confession?"—T. M.

(A) Unless this is not your son's first offense, you have done all you should do at this time. A 10-year-old does not always appreciate the seriousness of stealing, nor does he always think that taking money from a parent is "stealing."

Now that you have explained to him what "stealing" means, its consequences, and its seriousness, let the matter drop. Don't treat your son as if he were a criminal and don't be suspicious of his future actions. You have put him on his honor and you should, therefore, trust him until you have reason to believe that this trust is unjustified. The very fact that your son wants to repay the money he took with his own earnings and that he is willing to confess and apologize to his father, shows that he now appreciates the seriousness of what he has done.

Nudity in Swim Suits Gone But Girls Still Get Ogles

Miami Beach, Fla.—(U.P.)—A leading swim wear designer reports that once-fashionable nudity is being hidden at the bathing beaches this year.

For that reason, paradoxically, girls are getting more ogles than before.

Paradoxical, perhaps, but pretty, certainly, were Margit Fellegi's 1952 Cole of California designs as displayed on a covey of curvy models at the ocean-side boardwalk of the Roney Plaza hotel. To the untutored eye, they looked just about as undressed as ever.

Nevertheless petite Miss Fellegi stoutly maintained that her little suits were clear illustrations of an alleged new feeling in the fashion world that "nudity is no longer nice."

Backs Higher
She pointed out that virtually all of her designs this year raise the suit in back by a few vertebrae, block the view of hips with a bit of scalloping or cuffing, and make milady bather's décolletage loom less. Bold Bikinis and tiny two-piece affairs—like those back in the good old days—are now taboo, she said.

"Even though nudity is being hit hard," said Miss Fellegi, "men are looking at their women more intently than in the season of the Bikini."

"You see the American man is, bless his heart, really embarrassed by exposure. Back in Bikini time, he would look, blush, and look away. Now with prudence returning in women's swim suits, the man has a good excuse for looking longer."

"The American male—like that little Cuban man—sees in his mind whatever he wants to see, anyway," she said.

Look Less Lumpy
The designers said over-brief swim styles in recent years have served only to show "how amazingly few women have good figures." The Cole fashions this year are engineered to make them look less lumpy.

There is, for instance, the "wing-ding bra," built with a flange out front for use in creating an optical illusion. If fate has been unpropitious, you flip the flange and right away you look like Jane in the first place, you flip the "wing-ding" flange the other way and then you're what you call "eclipsed," and girls who want to go on TV or book jackets should never give it that second flip.

Miss Fellegi said she sees no likelihood of deflation in busts in the near future. For one thing, women are exercising more and are bustier by nature now than they were a few years ago.

"It's encouraging to note that our women are now having to depend less on artifice than on themselves," Miss Fellegi said.
