

Illinois Win Shows Promise of 200 Taft Delegates by May

By LYLE C. WILSON
Washington—(U.P.)—Sen. Robert A. Taft's presidential primary victory in Illinois has practically guaranteed that he will have more than 200 Republican national convention delegates by month's end.

A bare majority of 603 delegates is sufficient to nominate a Republican presidential candidate.

Taft won 48 of Illinois' 50 district delegates, raising his total to 179 so far. His chance of taking the 10 Illinois delegates at large to be selected later was considered to be excellent.

Like May Get Two
Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower was not entered in the Illinois primary, but may take the other two delegates to raise his total to 71.

Harold E. Stassen's presidential stock slumped again on Illinois returns. The delegates credited to him prior to the Illinois primary were won in Wisconsin despite a spectacular Eisenhower write-in vote which made that polling a real victory for the general.

There was some write-in for Eisenhower in Illinois. But there was nothing to detract from Taft's big victory.

Observers Unimpressed
Sen. Estes Kefauver's fat vote in the Democratic primary did not greatly impress political observers for lack of any opposition. There was a write-in trickle for Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson.

It is the delegates who count in Illinois. The popular vote indicates the favor of the voters. But the delegates are elected separately and are not pledged. The Illinois Democratic organization has been counted as anti-Kefauver. Under such conditions his popular poll would not mean much.

Shine Taken Off
Lack of a Democratic contest also took some shine off the fact that the Illinois Republican vote greatly exceeded that cast in the other primary.

Selection of delegates so far shows Taft strongest outside the east. Eight western, mid-western and border states have supplied nearly 40 of his delegates to date.

Electric output in the United States increased 58 times from 1902 to 1940, according to a Twentieth Century fund study.

New Jersey Boils As Republicans Press Campaign

Trenton, N. J.—(U.P.)—The Taft and Eisenhower camps turned on the heat Thursday night with charges as the crucial New Jersey presidential preference primary neared.

The possibility arose of a close vote in next Tuesday's primary. Record balloting was expected.

Taft Backers Accused
Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll accused backers of Sen. Robert A. Taft Wednesday night of conducting a "well-oiled" underdog campaign. He charged that the Senator's withdrawal from the primary was a "fake."

Taft forces again accused the governor, who heads the state GOP organization's slate of 38 delegates to the national nominating convention, of tricking the Ohio Republican into not entering a slate in the primary.

Harold E. Stassen meanwhile conducted a grueling campaign through northern and central New Jersey.

Driscoll, conceding for the first time that Taft could win the preferential vote, urged all supporters of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower to redouble their efforts in the remaining days of the campaign.

The Grange

Butte Falls Grange
Regular meeting of Butte Falls Grange was held April 7. Mr. and Mrs. Ed Malloy received first and second degrees from Master Ward Symbouts.

Balloting for state officers was held and the social night chairman, Velma Casey, announced that the social night will be a card party in the town hall on Friday night, April 10.

A skit was given under direction of the lecturer in cooperation with the chaplain. Refreshments were served by Mr. and Mrs. Les Casey and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kincaid.

Wise Resource Use Thought Basis of Population Needs

Ashland — The natural resources of land, water, forests and wildlife in southern Oregon will support the area's population indefinitely if wisely used.

That optimistic opinion was generally agreed by resource specialists who participated in a two-day conservation program concluded Wednesday at Southern Oregon college, according to Dr. H. S. Fowler, assistant professor of physical science. The bright outlook for the valley's future was expressed in a panel discussion last night attended by students and townspeople.

Education of the Public
Essentials of conservation is our most important task, Dr. Elmo N. Stevenson, SOC president and moderator of the panel, said in summarizing the program. "We have invaluable resources with which to work, but we can expect to reap the greatest benefits from them only if we learn to use them wisely."

The panel felt that too many people think of "conservation" as a regulation which denies full use of natural resources. It was agreed that a better definition of conservation objectives would be "a state of harmony between man and the land."

Full Utilization
Describing the policy of the national forest service, Harold Thomas, Ashland ranger, said national forest lands are the people's property and should be used to the greatest possible extent. He described opportunities for commercial logging operations, for cattle grazing and for recreational purposes.

Thomas Orr, chief forester for the Klamath Falls office of Weyerhaeuser company, warned, however, that lumbering operations in Jackson county are exceeding the quantity of timber to be provided by new growth. He said the greatest problem facing

Spring's Beauty Gone for Woman

Seattle—(U.P.)—The brightness of spring was only a world of lonely darkness again Thursday for Mrs. Melba King.

The blind woman and her seeing-eye dog, Gypsy, had been happy as they walked to work Wednesday. Mrs. King couldn't see the cherry trees in bloom or the bright blue sky. But she could smell and feel, and Gypsy's happy barks seemed to do the rest.

"If I ever lost Gypsy, it would be like being blind all over again," she once said.

All day Gypsy had lain quietly beside her mistress' desk. Then a motorcycle sputtered by. Gypsy dashed out the door and gave chase.

Mrs. King heard a screech of brakes . . . a yelp of pain. Seconds later, she held the dying dog in her arms.

The woman's eyes filled with tears. She was blind again.
