No Law for Case; Dog Solves Issue
 Dallas, Tex.—(U.P.)—Like Solomon, Justice of the Peace Bill Richburg had a decision to make that he didn't have a law to fit. The devotion of a dog for his master made up his mind. Sam, a foxhound, was on the witness stand, the principal character in a custody suit. George Kelly and D. Gary both claimed the dog.

Kelly said he lost the hound on a hunting trip. Gary said he bought the dog for $25 from someone else, but would give him up if rightful ownership could be proved. When Kelly walked into the courtroom, Sam, who had shown little interest in the case, perked up. His long, black tail started wagging. "It's your dog, George" the judge said.

 Clearfield, Utah—(U.P.)—Two lumber yard owners tried everything they could to help someone rob their safe but it wasn't any use. M. A. McEntire and V. T. Hilton wanted to keep their safe from being blown up so they pinned this note on it: "Notice—there is no cash in this safe. For record storage only." Underneath that, they put down the correct combination. When two burglars smashed their way into the company office, they ignored the note and went to work with a chisel on the safe's hinges. It was no use. They gave up and settled for a typewriter and a pair of gloves. Next morning McEntire's son showed up. After calling the police, he gave the safe door an experimental twist. It fell to the floor with a crash.
