Removal of Leaves From Flowers Urged

Berkeley, Calif.—(U.P.)—Cut flowers will last longer if as many leaves as possible have been removed. Home Advisers at the University of California agricultural extension service point out that flowers lose moisture rapidly through the leaves after they have been picked. They suggest that removal of the leaves will eliminate some of the surfaces where evaporation can take place. Add other greens to replace the ones removed, the home advisers suggested. Another method for slowing evaporation from leaves and cut-flower stems is by keeping the surfaces where evaporation storage temperature low and humid. Sometimes cut flowers which have wilted can be revived by setting the container on a cool porch overnight, or in the refrigerator with a temperature of 40 degrees.
