Po Valley Region Gradually Digging Out of Flood Ruin

Rome—(U.P.)—An area of 264,000 acres in northern Italy is gradually re-emerging from the flood waters that swept over it four months ago.

It will be many months more before the reconstruction is completed, however. The consequences of the torrents that inundated the agriculturally-rich Po Valley are now being translated into statistics as the heartbreaking digging out continues slowly, revealing the destruction of a once-prosperous land.

To date, 123,000 acres have re-emerged; almost half of the 264,000 that went under water last November. The flood left more than 150,000 persons homeless and depleted the painstaking agricultural cultivation of centuries.

The flood destroyed more than 28,770,000 cubic yards of drainage ditches and reservoir installations; 7,000 of 21,000 farm buildings and units; one-third of all farm machinery and one-third of all livestock.

Seed Washed Away Nearly all planting seed and manure was washed away, along with 10,000 of 50,000 tons of sugar; 7,000 of 25,000 tons of grain and 200 of 1,000 tons of tobacco. Agricultural damage alone amounted to $58,400,000.

To that, add $20,800,000 damage to industry, of which more than $11,000,000 was suffered by a thriving sugar industry that had supplied most of Europe.

Destruction of public works, including roads and communications, is inestimable. Forty-three of 52 separate communities were flooded during those bleak days that started on Nov. 14, 1951. Seventeen were destroyed and of 150,000 persons left homeless, 100,000 still are living in barracks.

TESTIFIES—William C. Bullitt, former U. S. ambassador to Russia, appears before the Senate Internal Security Committee investigating the Institute of Pacific Relations. He testified that Owen Lattimore in 1936 either knew nothing about Mongolia or was "deliberately attempting to assist in the spread of Communist authority in Asia."

Lights Up Wins Fifth Running Of $25,000 Golden Gate Mile

Albany, Calif.—(U.P.)—Lights Up, owned by C. H. Jones and Sons of Long Beach, Calif., won the fifth running of the $25,000 Golden Gate mile Saturday as jockey Ralph Neves annexed his fourth stake victory in five starts at Golden Gate Fields. Getting off to a poor start in a bulky field of 13, Lights Up passed horse after horse until he was in fourth place at the three-quarter mark. Then, Neves applied the whip at the stretch and the brilliant five-year-old son of Eight Thirty collared the front running Phil D. and Gold Capitol to come home in front by three-quarters of a length. Phil D. was second, two lengths ahead of field horse Boomerang Boy, a 50 to 1 shot in the betting.
