Around Hollywood

By ALINE MOSBY

Hollywood —UPI— A reigning movie star had his belated triumphs Tuesday — his "stunt double" was such a flop that the live actor had to be called back for retakes.

The star is Jackie, the only trained lion thespian in Hollywood. He has the title role in RKO's George Bernard Shaw epic, "Androcles and the Lion."

Since Jackie is temperamental and might be moved to sample a two-footed actor's arm for taste, a man in a lion's suit took over for some shots in which Androcles, played by Alan Young, waltzes with the animal.

But trainer Mel Koontz proudly reported that the dummy lion "just didn't look right."

"He moved his head jerkily," he said. "So the real Jackie came back to do the scenes."

Double in Danger Spots

Koontz, in a wig and roman toga, will double for Young in the most dangerous shots, just as the trainer has doubled for Jackie's other co-stars.

Jackie has a monopoly on lion roles in the movies, since no other lion has been schooled to act with the two-footed stars. Jackie wrestled with Victor Mature in "Samson and Delilah." He has starred in Tafzan movies and has the title role in a Warner epic, "The Lion and the Horse."

Rank Amateur

MGM tried to use the real-life GI's lion pet, Fagan, in the picture, "Fearless Fagan." But Fagan was a rank amateur at turning his profile to the camera, so Jackie had to be rushed in to take over that title role.

"In the fights between the lion and the horse in the Warner movie, it was a man in a lion's suit on the horse's back, of course," Koontz added.

Successor Nasty

Jackie is nastier than his predecessor, Old Jackie, who died three years ago at the ripe old age of 22. Old Jackie was the star of such pictures as Harold Lloyd's "Mad Wednesday." He was so old, toothless and bored with it all that human luminaires could wrestle with him or pull his tail with no ill effects.

But young Jackie, who's five, doesn't have the same sweet disposition. So Koontz is training a baby lion to take over Jackie's job if he gets too uppity.
