Birds and Bees

To the Editor—I don't understand how the city could control the bees and forget to put the birds under control also.

I love the birds and the bees, but please let's not control one and not the other. It splits things up too much, it also is not fair to the bees.

A pair of robins built a nest in a rose bush at our place last year. Every time I went out in the yard they would power dive on me and try to part by hair. I don't like this kind of thing. I demand control while I still have by hair. They even scared all the cats in the neighborhood.

Let's make it a political issue, in the fight for justice. (Do I hear any politicians?)

I say it's time they looked some bird in the face and told him what to expect this election.

Did you ever see two woodpeckers in a fight? It's horrible.

So I say let's control them both, the birds and the bees. Then the bees can't sink the poor dogs and the birds will leave the cats and me alone.

I know lots of old birds that need control, don't you?

Governor Upheld

To the Editor: As I read the headlines of Gov. McKay's decision against D.S.T. I want to say I think he is fair to the largest number of people instead of the minority as of last year.

Remember in 1950 we the people of Jackson county voted D.S.T. out. As for the state uniform time it was for the whole state to be either on standard or D.S.T., not what the states of California or Washington were doing.

The travel agencies can have their time one hour ahead of what it is now. The radio station programs one hour ahead of what they are now.

In just how many homes do you think that the husband has a chance to listen to morning news at the time it is put on, as most men are on their way to work by 7:30.

The stores change their time to standard time in the summer instead of the D.S.T. The banks are opening 10 to 5. So the stores that want to open at 7 and close at 4 let them do so. But really don't you know the farmer can't crowd another hour of daylight into his spring and summer work as he has to be up and about at daylight and works till dark.

Just remember that in 1950 the people of Jackson county voted the D.S.T. time out, so if Gov. McKay sticks to his guns on standard time the city of Medford has no right to ask the people of Jackson county to comply with D.S.T. when we told them we wanted standard time at the polls.

And please tell me just when summer changed to 22 weeks long; not by any calendar that I receive each year.

The Crying Need

To the Editor: After reading and studying the news for several decades and duly weighing the present sorry mess we've arrived at, it seems high time to awaken an unsuspecting public attention with a very rude observation, namely that our erstwhile much vaunted American dream or age of Utopia isn't panning out. The evils we thought were left over in the Old World have not only migrated here but have actually been increased!

A very much needed prayer in our land today is the following: "From all blindness of heart; from pride, vain-glory, and hypocrisy; from envy, hatred and malice, and all uncharitableness, Good Lord, deliver us." That is the peremptory and ominous challenge of our time. All else: changing presidents, new elections, and all the rest, amount to nothing.

If we're averse to the truth or too bigoted to listen to it, then the pathway to calamity is almost certain. If we can but dispel this engrossing illusion about our "success," "superiority" etc., and that we can easily conquer all the evils that threaten us, we might sober up enough to face the actuality of things and then do some real improvement and mitigate undermining evils. Perhaps no more important subject than this should arouse our concern.

Quarter of Million People Use Forest Facilities in 1951

A total of 246,780 persons used recreation facilities in Rogue River national forest during 1951, according to a report released Saturday by the United States Forest Service in Portland. Rogue River national forest was fifth among Oregon's 13 national forests in use of recreation facilities during the year, according to the report.

Use of the local national forest was divided as follows: Camp grounds, 34,330 persons; picnic areas, 18,980 persons; winter sports, 1,000 persons; organization camps, 1,800 persons; hotels and resorts, 12,800 persons; recreation residences, 4,600 persons; wilderness areas, 560 persons; other forest areas, 11,910 persons; and highways, roads and water routes, 161,000 persons.

Leading Oregon national forests in recreation use was the Hood River forest, which had 1,031,000 visitors. Siuslaw was second with 574,550, Deschutes third with 567,170, and Willamette fourth with 379,005.

Almost 12 million persons visited the 19 national forests in Oregon, Washington and northern California. Of this number some 3½ million used campgrounds, picnic facilities, winter sports areas and other facilities. Another 8½ million passed through the national forests on highways and water routes on sightseeing and business trips.

The Forest Service reports a trend toward heavy use of picnic areas because of the popularity of afternoon drives on which picnic lunches are carried. Fishermen and vacationing families, some from as far away as Florida and Maine, came with trailers or brought sleeping bags and tents, spending entire vacations in the numerous campgrounds areas, the report states.

The "smoke" that rises from an erupting volcano is not smoke, but steam. The black color of the vapor comes from carried amounts of volcanic ash carried by the steam.
