Teachers Plan
Illiteracy Study
Hartford, Conn. — (U.P.) — Nearly 2,000 American school teachers will attend workshops this summer in an attack upon economic illiteracy.
They will bring back to their classrooms in the fall subject matter on the American economy, its strengths, weaknesses, and present-day challenges. The 28 workshops, mostly on university campuses, will be held in 19 states and Hawaii. Average length of a workshop is three weeks.
During that period teachers hear lectures on economic subjects by experts in their field, discuss problems with the speakers and then are assisted by curriculum experts in planning a classroom presentation that will be meaningful to their pupils.
Here are some of the subjects considered by teachers at a typical workshop: What are the achievements and potentialities of our economy; how does a free enterprise economy function; what are its energizing and controlling forces; what economic problems does mobilization impose; how can we deal with current inflationary pressures; what are the problems of agriculture; what is our farm price support policy; what are the problems of labor-management relations; what are the problems of social security and social welfare; what is America's role in world trade?
At workshop sessions teachers are in association with business men and industrialists, labor leaders, representatives of agriculture, government and civic organizations.
