A Nichols' Worth of Comment On This and That

BY HARMAN W. NICHOLS
United Press Feature Writer

Washington — (U.P.) — If the man behind the wheel were more alert, America would have a more respectable safety record on the highways.
A veteran safety expert puts it this way:
"Failure of the U. S. motorist to check on his own physical fitness to drive contributes heavily to accidents."

L. S. (Pete) Harris, executive director of the American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators, says "Just as it is important to know that your car is mechanically perfect, it is imperative the motorist while driving make sure of his own condition, particularly with reference to fatigue and drowsiness. When these conditions appear, a halt is indicated."

Frequent Rest Advocated
Harris advocates frequent rest stops, like the coffee breaks taken during working hours in business and industry. This applies particularly, he adds, to long trips.
The importance of taking it easy was pointed up recently by the New York University Safety Center. This outfit made a survey and discovered that in large cities, the average motorist must make as many as 50 decisions an hour. Many of these are on the split-second, such as crossing lanes to make a left turn or avoiding the fellow up ahead who slams on his brakes without warning or gives the wrong signal for a turn.

Country Average Less
Out in the country, where traffic is thinner, the average is 20 decisions an hour.
The center figures that on congested thoroughfares, the motorist "is always less than a second away from an accident."

Harris adds to this by saying: "Uninterrupted driving, like prolonged work of any kind, builds drowsiness and fatigue to a point that can be fatal. The tired driver is less vigilant, loses the ability to judge speed and distance, reacts more slowly to emergencies and is less able to resist the glare of headlights. Mistake Can Be Fatal."

"A mistake by an overtired office worker can be corrected with an eraser; a mistake by a driver can be fatal."

The views were set forth by the groups' national leaders in statements prepared for the House Banking committee. The committee is considering legislation to extend the Defense Production Act beyond June 30.
Farm Bureau President Allan B. Kline recommended that Congress extend the powers to set allocations and priorities on materials and to curb consumer and real estate credit.
Herschel D. Newsom, Grange Master, also recommended extension of authority to control credit.
