Explorer Missing, Can't Keep Engagement

Flint, Mich. — (U.P.) — Members of the Industrial Executives club here planned to hear a speech by Kenneth Krippene, explorer.

One night before Krippene's scheduled talk, his agent announced that the explorer would be unavailable. The agent explained that Krippene set off in the jungles of Peru in search of an emerald mine last fall and hadn't been heard from since.

Mother Rabbit Splits Litter for Feeding

Kalamazoo, Mich. — (U.P.) — Joseph C. Gregory's New Zealand white rabbit had a feeding problem on her hands when she gave birth to a litter of 15, close to a record.

However, the rabbit solved the problem as any good mother would. She divided the litter into three groups of five and put her young on a three-hour schedule. Luncheon is served every hour in rotation.

SURRENDERS TO U.N.

St. Louis — (U.P.) — Joe Mikecin has changed the name of his United Nations Bar here in compliance with a UN dislike of commercial use of the title. Mikecin wrote UN headquarters in New York that he was renaming his tavern the White Flag "in complete surrender to the cause of peace."

English Royalty Opposes Standard Tourist Price

London — (U.P.) — There will be no "stately homes of England trade union" this year.

Blue blood is running cold at the prospect of a price-cutting war among the dukes, the earls, the marquesses and barons who are trying to lure tourists to their ancient homes and castles. A proposal for such a union or association was made by Sir Harold Wernher, who lives in an imposing pile called "Luton Hoo" (built 1762) with the support of young Lord Montagu, dancing partner of Princess Margaret and present occupant of Palace House in Beaulieu, a 13th century landmark.

The Earl of Warwick (14th century Warwick Castle) was in favor of the project as well and invitations to discuss it were sent to the Earl of Onslow (Clendon Park, magnificent 18th century Italian style mansion), the Duke of Richmond and Gordon (Goodwood House) and Viscount Hinchingbroke (one of the "Olivier Cromwell slept here" houses).

Peers Disagree

"The idea," said Lord Montagu, "was to set up a standard entrance fee or otherwise the whole thing might run riot."

The Duke of Marlborough, whose Blenheim Palace is the nation's chief stately home attraction, remained aloof, as did Queen Elizabeth's cousin, the Earl of Harewood (Harewood House) and the Marquess of Bath (Longleat House) second in the tourist league.

Sir Harold's group thought it might be well to make a standard entrance fee of about two shillings sixpence (30 cents) for tea and perhaps three shillings sixpence (48 cents) for lunch.

Extras would not be controlled — the Duke of Marlborough sells flowers from his estate, the Earl of Shrewsbury and Waterford peddles vegetables, the Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshal of England, has a gasoline filling station.

The plan for the union has fallen through, however, and now peer is watching peer narrowly as the tourist season opens to see whether prices will be cut from last year's range of two shillings (28 cents) to two shillings sixpence.

The Duke of Marlborough can afford to be independent. He has an unbeatable combination in one of the world's great homes and the room in which Winston Churchill was born, complete with the layette worn by the future prime minister.

Last year he had 126,000 admissions and, with extras, gathered some $30,000. His son, the pink-cheeked Marquess of Blandford helped collect the money.

PEBBLES MAKE HOME Killen, Ala. — (U.P.) — L. E. Gantney and his family of eight live in a self-constructed, seven-room house made of pebbles and rocks picked up from the ground. Gantney, his sons, his wife and interested neighbors built the house. They stacked the rocks around a wooden frame and filled in all air holes with cement.
