Border Respected
Madame Taskeran, who is on a three-month visit to this country, said, however, that the dividing line between the two countries is honored rather strictly. "Both we and the Russians have armed guards at the frontier," she said. "Occasionally one of our villagers will wander across the border but not for long. We're neighbors but we're not the type to gossip over the back fence. We tend to our own business." Madame Taskeran, a former school teacher, has been a member of parliament for eight years. Turkey, a democracy, has the two-party system, as in this country. She is a Democrat. "She is proud that three women are included in the 485-member governing body. Voting Since 1930. "After all," she said, "you women have been voting since the 20s and we weren't given the vote until 1930. It was 1934 before women could run for parliament." The lawmaker holds a philosophy degree from the University of Istanbul and for 18 years taught in Istanbul and Ankara. She is married to a surgeon and they have two children and one grandchild. The Turkish woman is in this country at the State Department's invitation to study rural life. # Teachers Taking GI Bill Courses Need Statements

School teachers who are World War II veterans and who plan to spend the summer studying for a degree under the GI bill will need a supporting statement from a responsible official of their school, stating they have been regularly employed at teaching during the 1951-52 school year, it was announced today by the Veterans Administration. The statement, which should show the beginning and ending dates of employment, must be presented to the school at the time the teacher starts his course, the VA said. The school will forward it to the VA along with the rest of his enrollment papers. GI bill teacher-students must attend summer sessions of not less than five weeks, and the course must lead to an academic degree. The VA said the rules apply to teachers who were enrolled under the GI bill last summer. They will be permitted to study for a degree during succeeding summer terms, so long as they are regularly employed as teachers the rest of the year and do not skip any summer sessions. The VA said veterans finishing school this spring, who plan to get jobs as teachers this fall, must make early application for enrollment in courses this summer term, if they expect to continue working for advanced degrees under the GI bill at future summer sessions.

Robeson Will Sing in Seattle Auditorium

Seattle—(U.P.)—Left-wing baritone Paul Robeson Monday prepared for a Tuesday night concert in the civic auditorium, which was secured by his sponsors despite the objections of city officers. Sunday, he appeared at the Blaine, Wash., peace arch park where he sang old favorites before a crowd of about 5,000. The occasion was without incident and reports of organized "heckling" groups failed to materialize. His appearance was sponsored by the Mine and Smelter's union of British Columbia and a group calling itself "Friends of Labor."
