

Stripper Offers Bras and Panties To College Boys

New York —(U.P.)— Any more of you college boys looking for panties and brassieres?

Get in touch with Miss Lili St. Cyr of 65 West 52nd Street, New York city. She's an expert in taking off clothes, having made a career of it in night clubs from coast to coast.

Would Give Panties
Now Miss St. Cyr is working on a project to part with a portion of her panties and bra supply to each of the colleges where the men students have pursued co-ed lingerie in dormitory raids.

"I think they should get a sort of reward," the blonde originator of the reverse strip said gently. "It is such a nice sign when men show an aggressive interest in a girl."

She explained apologetically that, "I never wear black lace panties," and chided college officials for taking the panty pranks too seriously.

"I didn't go to college myself," Lili explained. "But you learn things in my work that those professors don't know. It's really not the panties, you know. The boys just want to show how strong and brave they are. It's a way of getting attention from the girls, too. And you really shouldn't discourage a young boy about things like that."

Higher Whisky Tax Reducing Revenue For Government

Washington —(U.P.)— The government's higher tax on whisky is having a reverse effect.

Dance School Sued By Ired Customer

Portland —(U.P.)— Mrs. Erma E. Commons, Albany, Ore., filed suit in circuit court here Monday asking $10,000 punitive damages from the Arthur Murray School of Dancing and its Portland operators.

Mrs. Commons charged in her complaint that the firm represented falsely it could improve her personality and better her ability to obtain a position, as well as teach her to dance.

She said the dance school induced her to pay $628 last November and to sign an agreement to pay an additional $600 for a course in dancing.

She asked that the $628 be returned to her, the agreement to pay $600 be declared invalid and that she be awarded $10,000 as punitive damages.

It's cutting down—instead of increasing—revenue.

The apparent reason is that many persons have turned to beer or wine—or to bootleggers—rather than buy whisky at the higher prices.

Figured Wrong

The government figured that consumption of legal whisky would drop when the tax on distilled spirits was raised from $9 to $10.50 a gallon last November. But it thought the higher tax would just about offset the smaller consumption.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue had estimated that consumption would fall from 194,000,000 in fiscal 1951 to 169,000,000 gallons in this fiscal year. At the same time, it figured that the liquor tax would yield $1,683,000,000, compared with actual collections of $1,746,005,581 in fiscal 1951.

Revenue To Be Short

From present indications, however, the bureau is going to be about $150,000,000 short on its estimate of whisky revenue.

The higher tax has not only put a crimp in federal income but has also cut heavily into the revenues of the 46 states and the District of Columbia where the sale of whisky is legal. The states did not raise their taxes—averaging $1.66 a gallon—when the federal government boosted its excise tax last November. The reduced sales are beginning to hurt them even more.

The higher tax also has had its repercussions in the whisky industry, which has been thrown into a slump as a result of bulging warehouse supplies and consumer resistance to higher prices.

PUTS HER FOOT IN IT

Portland —(U.P.)— A two-day police institute on civil defense measures opened here Monday with about 100 police officials from Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana in attendance.

Miss Chadwick Plans Four Endurance Swims

New York —(U.P.)— Florence Chadwick hopes to set an awe-inspiring swimming record this summer with four major endurance swims, then retire from competition.

Not content with being the only woman ever to swim the English Channel both ways, the former secretary wants to make a "grand slam" before she retires at 33.

Plans Listed
As she talked about her plans in her two-room hotel apartment, Florence held out a carefully typed sheet of paper listing the planned swims.

She wants to swim the 21 miles from Catalina Island to the California mainland, attempting to break the record of 15 hours, 40 minutes set by a man 25 years ago.

From there she would head for the Dardanelles to swim the legendary waters of the Hellespont. By July 15th she hopes to be swimming the Straits of Gibraltar, a 14-mile shark-infested stretch of water which has been crossed successfully by five men, but no women.

English Channel Again
"Then I'd like to wind up with the English Channel, trying it again from England to France," Florence said.

She was the first woman to make the England-to-France crossing last summer. "But I want to try to break the men's record," she explained. "I could have done it last year if I hadn't been sick from the boat fumes."

The swimmer, who admitted she weighs 152 pounds now, the heaviest of her career in preparation for the gruelling four swims, has been training since January for a final season.

Wants All-Time Record

"I'm 33 now, and you can't go on swimming forever," she said. "This will be my last season. I don't want to be known as a stunt girl, but I'd just like to establish an all-time women's sports record before I quit. To me that's what makes sports go around—accepting challenges."
