

Next Summer White House May Be in Pennsylvania

Gettysburg, Pa. — (U.P.) — Eisenhower supporters in this historic battlefield community are telling visitors that the next "Summer White House" will be on an 189-acre farm about three miles south of here.

The farm was bought by Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower for $44,000 in November of 1950. The general never got a chance to occupy his rural retreat because the press of national duties sent him to Europe two months later to take charge of the organization of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

If Eisenhower should be nominated at the Republican convention in July, and is elected President in November, it is possible that the eight-room red brick dwelling on the farm would become the scene of historic events — either as a summer White House or as a rural retreat. It is only a two-hour drive from Washington.

The farm lies about 2,000 feet west of the southern rim of Seminary Ridge. Gen. Robert E. Lee's strongpoint at the Battle of Gettysburg. Less than a mile north lies the area from which Pickett launched his troops that failed to dislodge the charge of Gen. George E. Meade.

The Eisenhower farm — it has no formal name — is purely a working establishment now. It has shown a modest profit under the direction of Brig. Gen. Arthur S. Nevins, Ret., who has been a close friend of Eisenhower since their World War I days.

The largest structure on the farm is a red and blue barn about three times the size of the main house. Windmills draw the water from the earth.

The biggest money-maker on the farm is a herd of 12 milk producing Holsteins and ten Guernseys. There are also 11 calves, eight of them heifers. Altogether the herd produces 60 gallons of milk daily.

At present about 1,000 white Leghorns produce some 15 dozen eggs daily. The yield is expected to jump to about 30 dozen in August and September.

All of the acreage not used for pasture is cultivated, either in corn, wheat, hay or oats.

One of the reasons that Eisenhower chose to make his permanent home in Pennsylvania was the deep attachment he formed for the rolling central Pennsylvania country when he served at nearby Camp Colt during his early days in the Army.

Another reason is that Pennsylvania is Eisenhower country from way back. His ancestors originally settled in Pennsylvania between 1730 and 1740. His father, David Eisenhower, spent his boyhood at nearby Elizabethville, Pa. A brother, Milton S., is president of Pennsylvania State College. Another brother, Earl, lives at California, Pa. Should Eisenhower become president and a war ensue, he
