Carburetor Too Rich Makes Motorist Too Poor

Car owners who are wasting money and not getting proper gas mileage due to over-rich mixtures will be pleased to learn of a Wisconsin inventor who has developed a very clever unit that helps save gasoline by "vacu-mating." It is automatic and operates on the supercharge principle. Easily installed in a few minutes. Fits all cars, trucks and tractors. The manufacturers, the Vacu-matic Carburetor Co., 7617-700 W. State St., Wauwatosa, Wis., are offering a Vacu-matic to anyone who will install it on his car and help introduce it to others. They will gladly send full free particulars if you write them or send your name and address on a post card today.

Salveson Posts 200th Coast Loop Triumph

San Francisco — (U.P.) — Jack Salveson, the oldest 38-year-old hurler in baseball, Monday pointed to his record of 200 Pacific Coast league victories to prove his theory of pitching.

Ol' Jack, steadfastly maintaining "I'm only 38," labored to triumph number 200 Sunday when he gained San Diego a 6-1 nightcap victory over Oakland. Salveson was reached for four hits over the seven-inning distance. Two safeties came in one frame, accounting for the Oak run.

Three Game Lead
San Diego also took the opener from the Oaks, 6-2, to gain a 5-2 edge in the series and draw out to a three-game league lead. Second-place Hollywood divided with Seattle, losing 2-1, but winning 12-2. Los Angeles won two from Sacramento, 3-2 and 9-1, to salvage three games of the series. Portland and San Francisco halved it, the Bevs copping the first one, 7-2, but losing the second, 2-1.

A bespectacled righthander, Salveson entered the "second century" club in the speedy time of 1 hour 37 minutes. This was accomplished while working against relief pitcher Bill Ayers, a notoriously deliberate moundsman, for 6 2/3 innings.

Games Fast

Salveson's games are always fast. His pitching theory makes that necessary. "Get in there and let 'em hit," he espouses.

Punishment on Singapore Inhabitants Heated Topic

Singapore — (U.P.) — Whether mass punishment on the inhabitants of a small town is wholly justified, partially justified or unjustified is a heated topic of discussion in the country.

Malayan Communist terrorists killed eight policemen and four civilians, including two Europeans, and wounded eight other policemen in an ambush at Tanjong Malim, a rail hub town in central Malaya. The British high commissioner, Gen. Sir Gerald Templer went to the town from Kuala Lumpur "to give the population a real whipping."

He did not lash them with a Zorro whip or the Malayan cat o' nine tails. He whipped them with his tongue and imposed drastic penalties for their "cowardly silence."

Among the various "sentences" imposed were: 1. Shops will remain open only for two hours a day. 2. No one is allowed to leave the town. 3. All schools will be closed. 4. No bus services. 5. No free-market rice to be sold in the whole police district. 6. Reduction in the ordinary ration. 7. Reorganization of the district under firmer administration.

Nearly 20,000 people were affected by the collective punishment the high commissioner meted out.

Leaders Told Off

Three hundred leaders were assembled in a hall before Templer arrived and the high commissioner told them what he was there for.

He told them that the men who were slain by the Communists were on their way to repair a water pipe sabotaged by the terrorists so that the inhabitants of the town would have their water. He said the ambush would not have occurred if only the people had the courage (to give information to the authorities).

Templer then went on to list the series of major crimes perpetrated in the town since the emergency began: five ambushes, 10 attacks on police and the military posts, five lorries burned, 6,000 rubber trees slashed, seven strikes due to intimidation of labor, three buses destroyed, five unsuccessful road ambushes, one train derailed, one attempted derailment, one attack on a kampong (village), two pipelines damaged, 16 bandit camps found, a total of 26 killed, nine police wounded, seven civilians killed, and two wounded.

During the past six months, the high commissioner said, there had been only three cases in the area where information was given on which it was possible to take effective action.

Templer said he was certain the recent ambush and all the other crimes could only have taken place with the knowledge of certain of the local inhabitants. He branded those people who withheld information as cowards.

Warns Against Reds

Templer said the inhabitants wanted everything done for them, but they were not prepared to assume the responsibility of citizenship and he was going to see to it that the abuse was stopped.

The high commissioner also warned his listeners that Communism is the most evil thing in the world. "Do you think that under a Communist regime you will be able to live a happy family life? Don't you realize that even your children will be set to spy upon you?" he asked.

Supporters of Templer's action described it as a lesson in responsibility, and as a warning to those who deliberately withhold assistance from the authorities and so connive in terrorism. It is a principle well known in ordinary law, they added, that those who have guilty knowledge should be dealt with as accessories.

Punishment Felt Unfair

Opponents of the action asserted it was not fair for the people of the town to be punished for crimes perpetrated by a handful of Communists. The collective punishment, they said, will not cause the Communists to call off their ambushes, rubber tree slashings and the building of bandit camps.

They also contended that the majority of the people had kept silent through fear based largely on the belief that the government could not provide them with adequate protection.
