Baked Ham Given Blame for Illness At Grants Pass

Portland — (U.P.) — Baked ham was blamed Thursday as the cause of food poisoning that affected 150 persons at a mother-and-daughter church banquet in Grants Pass May 13.

The state board of health said a study by Dr. Carrol W. Dewey, Josephine county health officer, showed that all but 30 of the persons attending the banquet developed nausea and other poison symptoms within eight to 24 hours after eating. Most of the victims were ill for a period of four to six hours, but some were sick for as long as three days and others were hospitalized.

Dr. Samuel Osgood, state epidemiologist, said none of the ham was left for examination, but added ham frequently causes food poisoning at large gatherings because it is sliced long before a meal and left at a low oven temperature that speeds bacterial growth.

There are several federal cases on file, and they will be heard when Judge James Alger Feels able to come to Medford to hold court, they said.
