By SID HOLLINGSWORTH
Father John Cummlisky was called upon to offer a few remarks at a recent quiz conducted on Friday evenings each month by the Knights of Columbus. He emphasized the dual relationship of religious exercises at the camp with both Catholic and Protestant chaplains serving their respective constituencies, each using the same chapel at different hours.

"We work both sides of the street at Camp White," was his direct way of explaining the situation.

Then in all public gatherings where a chaplain officiates, both Father Cummlisky and the Rev. Henry Anderson are present for their special part of the ceremony. This is in accordance with VA practice.

All of which is an important consideration as it bears upon the problem of returning the veterans to the life of the community. Oregon, along with other frontier states, has a strong undecurrent of religious feeling stemming from the missionary spirit and the evangelistic movement together with the traditional American belief in tolerance resulting from precedents which induced so many to seek freedom in the New World.

And at no time is there any coercion to attend the exercises but the chapel and recreation hall are always well patronized by the membership in the various devotions.

The enthusiasm with which this work is carried on is shown in the large number of churches of the vicinity cooperating in appearing on Sunday evenings and at other times to conduct services. A list of 31 denominational groups was furnished by Chaplain Anderson, under whose auspices these visitation programs are arranged.

This is the list: Apostolic Faith, Medford; Assembly of God, Ashland; Assembly of God, Shady Cove; Baptist, Ashland; First Baptist, Medford; Temple Baptist, Medford; Brethren, Medford; Christian (Church of Christ), Central Point; First Christian, Medford; Central Christian, Medford; Christian, Phoenix; Church of God, Medford; Community Church, Eagle Point; Community Church, Central Point; Community Church, Murphy; Episcopal (St. Marks) Medford; Four Square Gospel, Medford; Friends, Medford; Gidioness-International, Medford; Holiness (Pilgrim) Medford; Latter Day Saints, Medford; Lutheran (Zion Evangelical) Medford; Lutheran (St. Peter's) Medford; Presbyterian (First) Medford;

Methodist, Ashland; First Methodist, Medford; Free Methodist, Medford; Nazarene, Medford; Nazarene, Prospect; Salvation Army, Medford; Seven Day Adventists, Medford.

It is significant in connection with this effort that the Protestant membership at Camp White covers 20 denominations. A religious film is presented once a month which is viewed with interest by both Catholic and Protestant members. Mrs. James Cech, the organist, gives a pictorial "Flannelgraph" presentation of Bible stories, each month.

As is the practice in Domiciliary Centers, home members are employed in responsible positions serving under supervision of the civil service appointments. It is this way in the chapel where Frank T. Rhinehart performs his duties as clerk to the chaplains. He had been a clerk in the Army.

But the interesting thing about Frank is his further qualification as a school teacher. He taught in high school and junior college in his home state of North Carolina for 25 years. And this understanding of personalities and facility in dealing with men who are still boys at heart, is a great asset in the position he holds.

Rhinehart is married and has five children. (One boy is now serving in Korea and his wife expects soon to visit him there.) He has heart ailment, which is a considerable handicap but no one would ever suspect his disability from his always affable manner.

Part of his trouble stems, no doubt, from a back injury sustained in a bus accident in Washington state in 1949. He was in a state of coma for some time after this catastrophe. He has held his post here for the past 18 months and is devoted to the Chaplains Anderson and Cummlisky.

A lightning storm hit the Washington area the other night. A bolt hit a television aerial and set a home fire. Nobody was killed, but somebody might have been because lightning can be dangerous.

Dale E. Auck, a fire protection engineer for the Federation of Mutual Fire Insurance Companies, is an expert on lightning statistics. He has some tips on how you may save your own life during a storm. He says that each year lightning kills or injures about 2,000 persons. It also destroys $130,000,000 worth of property and kindles 36,000 fires. Auck says that despite this ever present danger, most people know little about lightning.

"Not long ago, a farm couple in Iowa was nearly frightened to death by a freak type of lightning," he says.

They were sitting in the parlor when suddenly a ball of yellow fire about the size of a baseball shot out of the dining room, swept around them and disappeared up the fireplace. It left an acrid odor behind it. The couple thought the end had come for sure. Auck says they didn't dream up the story they told later, but adds that they shouldn't have been too alarmed. It was merely a weird type of lightning and among the least dangerous of the types that exist."

To avoid trouble, possible injury and loss of property, he says, you can take a few precautions. Proper lightning rod installation is the best protection.

Auck lists some rules you might follow when lightning is in the vicinity.

Avoid open fields. If you are caught by a surprise thunderstorm on a picnic or golf course, take shelter in a low building. If none is handy, you will be safer lying flat on the ground. Keep away from lights, television sets, radios, electrical fixtures, telephone lines or other metals that might conduct an electrical charge. Don't handle inflammable liquids. Stay away from trees.

Urban, Ill.—(U.P.)—New equipment installed at the University of Illinois makes its mine ventilation laboratory one of the most modern and complete in the nation, university officials said.

Two new fans of different types, one of them capable of ventilating a small mine, have been added to the laboratory equipment of the mining and metallurgy department at Illinois. The fan delivers up to 30,000 cubic feet of air a minute.

It is an axial flow fan, operating in the manner of a kitchen ventilator or summer cooling fan. The other is a centrifugal type, operating on the same principle as a vacuum cleaner blower.

Regulus is so distant that its light requires 65 years to reach us. In the telescope, a rather faint purple star is found near Regulus; and in other parts of the constellation, interesting nebulae and double stars.

The Leonid meteors, which several times in the past have produced splendid showers in November, seem to radiate outward from a location inside the Sickle of Leo; hence the name.

Sawyer, a candidate for the Democratic nomination from North Carolina's sixth congressional district, says the act is a crowd-stopper. He makes the speeches; Buzzie Potts, a Barnum and Bailey veteran, handles the slapstick, and Daisy Potts' dog, walks on her hind legs.

The result probably has made more school-age youngsters in the sixth district election-conscious than any civic course offered at school.

Heavenly Creatures Seen

By J. HUGH PRUETT
Astronomer, Extension Division Oregon Higher Education System

The ancient star gazers seemingly had little trouble sighting various living creatures in the heavens above them. Perhaps we lack imagination, for the members of the celestial menagerie are not so evident to most of us. But we shall here attempt without the aid of a diagram to point out one of the fiercest of these "heavenly" beasts.

Leo the Lion, is a prominent constellation, or star group, around 1 1/2 hours after sunset at this time of year it is high in the sky between the west and southwest. Look first for the only bright star in this region of the heavens. This is Regulus, and its light has a bluish-white sparkle. Prominent Figure Regulus is at the end of the handle of the Sickle, a prominent figure shaped like the familiar instrument used for cutting grass that has grown too high for the lawn mower. This sickle has its open side downward toward the horizon with the handle toward the left as if some unseen giant, reaching up from the southwest, were going to cut a swath among the little stars above the western horizon.

The Sickle is easily traced. To the right of Regulus, a fainter star completes the straight handle. Then curving upward, northward and finally downward, four stars complete the figure. The star at the sharp point of this sickle is usually pictured in the forehead of our celestial Lion. The curve of stars run through his head and neck, with Regulus on his chest. Smaller stars complete his front legs.

Rest of Lion Visible But no lion is complete with only head, neck and front legs. Somewhat higher and toward the east, we find the prominent triangle of three stars. The most eastern—and brightest—of these three stars is Denebola, in the lion's tail. The other two are in his hips and extend toward some fainter stars which trace the hind leg. With some imagination one now sees a complete "king of beasts."

Leo is found pictured on the records of many ancient peoples. Some used to compare the strength of the Lion with the fierce heat of the summer sun. According to the Greek mythology, he was the ferocious beast killed in the forest of Nemea by Hercules. So terrible was the conflict that Jupiter considered the Lion worthy of immortality, and placed him among the stars.

Double Stars Found Regulus is so distant that its light requires 65 years to reach us. In the telescope, a rather faint purple star is found near Regulus; and in other parts of the constellation, interesting nebulae and double stars.

The Leonid meteors, which several times in the past have produced splendid showers in November, seem to radiate outward from a location inside the Sickle of Leo; hence the name.

Clumsy Burglar Fails In Robbery Attempt Peoria, Ill.—(U.P.)—A clumsy burglar was thwarted in
