As We Live

TEEN-AGE INFATUATION NEEDS KINDLY PATIENCE AND TACT. Parents of teen-agers are often worried when their children become infatuated with what they regard as "unsuitable" people. The more they talk against them, the stronger the infatuation is likely to become. How to handle the problem is the question asked by the mother who wrote: (Q) "My 17-year-old son is interested in a girl seven years older than he. I have tried everything to get him to stay away from her but I am making no headway. At his age, one cannot tell what he may do. The girl is a diabetic and is in the hospital quite often. Everyone in her neighborhood knows of her condition. She works three or four days a week, when she is able and, if my son hasn't any money, she will buy him things. If my son doesn't go to see her and she knows where he is, she will suddenly appear there. Since she had quite a lot of influence over him, I'm afraid she will coax him into getting married. He has a hard time getting a job, because of his age, so he would not be able to take on responsibility like that. Please tell me what to do." (A) There are two things you can do to prevent your son from assuming the serious responsibilities of marriage long before he is ready. The first is to help him to see how impossible such a marriage would be, even if the age difference and his youth were not considered. Has he any idea what it costs to go to the hospital frequently and how much medicine for diabetes costs? I doubt it. Your Health and Its Care

HAD YOUR VISION MEASURED LATELY?

From the dismal, mud-splattered December day I hung out my shingle informing the Penn Yan public, in gold letters on a black board on larger than the side panel of a circus wagon, that the services of Doctor William Brady, Surgeon & Physician, were available to any one who had from two to four bits in his jeans, it seemed as though I ran into one snag after another because I could not keep my mouth shut, and still get into a lot of trouble that way.

Many of the patients who took a chance on the new doctor assured me they needed no advice about diet, for Dr. Harvey (we'll call him) had already warned them to eliminate starches. I inferred that Harvey was one of the old established physicians in the community. "What I need is a good tonic, Mr. Brady," they explained—and if I betrayed any reluctance about giving 'em the tonic they'd back right out and make a bee-line across the street to Keeler's drugstore where they could get it for 50c or less.

What rankled most was the discovery, which I made later, that the eminent Dr. Harvey, who was so radically opposed to starch in human nutrition, was not a physician at all. He was an optician, or maybe an optometrist.

An optician is one who is technically skilled in optics or one who makes or grinds lenses and fits spectacles which your oculist has prescribed.

An oculist or ophthalmologist is a physician who limits his practice to diseases or defects of the eyes or vision.

It would be a simple matter to decide whether to go to an oculist or an optician for an eye test or measurement of vision. If one were sure the impairment of vision were not a symptom or sign of the kidneys or the nervous system, probably an optician could measure the vision and fit the necessary spectacles or eye-

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS How to Gain Weight This summer I'll be expected to go in swimming, which I positively will not do with my skinny figure. Answer—Send stamped, self-addressed envelope and ask in writing for pamphlet HOW TO GAIN WEIGHT. Another liar You called a man 74 years old a liar and said that a person past 65 years is not capable of doing the exercise the man said he does—that is, touching toes without bending knees. I am nearly 75 and I do the same exercise more than a dozen times every night before I go to bed. (Mrs. L. C. E.) Answer—The guy said he does it 50 times. I called him "liar" in order to arouse just such a response as yours. Ma'am, I said "most individuals of 65 are too stiff and brittle in body and mind to carry on such activity. I congratulate you on your youth." National Newspaper Syndicate, Chicago 6, Illinois
