Australian Paratroopers Will Be 'De-Glamorized'

Sydney, Australia — (U.P.) — Australia is training a "de-glamorized" paratroop division which it believes will rank with the world's best in toughness and striking potential.

At Williamtown air base, 10 miles from industrial Newcastle, two initial groups of what will be Australia's first airborne division have graduated and a third group is in rigorous training.

On a two-mile square patch of sandy soil, scratched out of virgin bush about 100 miles from Sydney, the Australian school of combined land and air warfare is doing its bit to bring Australia the southern Pacific bastion of the democracies.

Here, Australia's toughest fighting men, in a brief but intensified four weeks, are trained under strict British methods and British experts.

The Australian airborne division, when completed, will be capable of integration with either United Kingdom or United States units, or will be able to stand alone as an integral part of the Australian armed forces.

Their British training allows the Australian unit to be welded quickly into any British airborne force if required.

Only a short refresher - conversion course will be needed to fit the Australian paratrooper into any United States outfit, even though American methods vary considerably from those of the United Kingdom.

As Squadron Leader C. Bourn, chief instructor and brains behind the Aussie "sky-soldier," said: "Our boys will be able to fight anywhere, anytime and with anybody."

Different Pattern
"We've used the British method of paratroop instruction because it is simpler than the U. S. system.

"The Americans stick closer to the German idea of paratroops with their costly equipment and 'muscle-man' selection of potential airborne soldiers.

"That way we're going to have more paratroops, with a better outlook on paratroop combat methods, and suffer not at all from the U. S. system."

Around Hollywood

Hollywood — (U.P.) — Julius Caesar was immortalized for conquering Europe, and his namesake, Caesar, should go down in history, too.

Caesar maintained the famed Caesar salad.

The only trouble, he sighed Monday is that every gourmet, headwaiter and dishwasher in Hollywood wants credit for it.

"Pat Di Cicco says he invented it... Paul's Duck Press restaurant say they started it... some headwaiter claims the same... everybody but me," shrugged the graying Italian.

"I originated it 28 years ago in Tijuana, Mexico, and these others, they just aren't the same."

Caesar now runs an Italian grocery store on La Cienega Blvd., movietown's restaurant row. He's regaining his claim to the salad by manufacturing his Caesar salad dressing in a tiny kitchen behind his store.

His salad, he pointed out with pride, has been called by the Epicurean Society International of Paris as "the only great dish to come out of America in 50 years." He concocted the dish at his "Caesar's Place" restaurant just south of San Diego in 1923.

Asked for His Salad
"Jean Harlow, Mabel Normand, all the stars would come to Tijuana and ask for Caesar's salad," he recalled as he sat at an oilcloth-covered table in his kitchen.

"But it didn't become famous until 1937 when a screenwriter, Manny Wolfe, one of my regular customers, went to the House of Murphy restaurant here, called for the ingredients and made the salad."

"The manager, Di Cicco, called it his salad. But Wolfe took the recipe to the Brown Derby and Chasen's and they called it Caesar Salad."

Ingredients Added
Since then the salad has spread to restaurants and homes around the world. But many makers, he shuddered, add such unstandard ingredients as Roquefort cheese and anchovies.

His original recipe: Romaine lettuce, a one-minute egg, garlic croutons, parmesan or Romano cheese, lemon juice, garlic, mustard, Worcestershire sauce, white pepper, fresh vinegar and olive oil. "I am proud that this is my creation," he said softly. "I received so many compliments for it. People write me from all over the world."
