A Nichols' Worth of— Comment On This and That

BY HARMAN W. NICHOLS
United Press Feature Writer

Washington—(U.P.)—The watermelon season is with us, and if the Department of Agriculture isn't mistaken we'll eat more this year than ever before. In 1951, 83,297,000 melons valued at $30,297,000 were consumed. This record is expected to be bettered this year.

There are 29 more or less common varieties of the giant of the cucumber family, making it a pretty big business. The growers have tackled some rather unusual names to the various kinds. For example, there is the "Georgia Rattlesnake," which has a sweet taste and is fine-grained. There is the "Irish Gray," which grows up to 40 pounds. Among others, there is a variety known to the trade as the "Yellow Ice Cream." It's yellow on the inside and has a sugary flavor.

Watermelons are fine to eat but not so easy to grow. A lot of things can go wrong from watermelon hill to the table, making it a highly speculative crop. The Department of Agriculture lists all sorts of enemies of the melon. There are the cucumber beetles, which destroy the seedling. Cut worms and wireworms have been known to cause considerable damage. There is a small louse-like insect known as the watermelon aphid. It obtains its livelihood by sucking plant juices.

The sale of the grown melons often is affected by the weather. On hot, sultry days the demand often exceeds the supply. But on rainy days, or in cool, unseasonable weather the demand falls off and the supply piles up in the back end of the grocery.

The growers or wholesalers are not completely off the hook financially, even after the melons are picked and ready for shipment. "A carload or truck load of melons may leave the farm in apparently perfect condition," the department says. "But if the cut stems are not treated with copper sulfate paste after picking, the melons may be so spoiled by stem-end rot as to be unsaleable when they reach the market."

Speaking of enemies of the melon grower, the department has been hospitalized in Medford for the past week following a fall June 9 at the silica plant, when he suffered four broken ribs. A short moan was heard from the big fire siren as it was tested Tuesday evening, after being moved from the old fire hall to its new position on top of the brick building on Broadway. The public's attention is called to the siren's new location at the old IOOF hall. The switch for operating the siren, with buttons marked "start" and "stop," is on the wall, just inside of the north door. In event of fire, the person sounding the siren must remain at the building until arrival of the first fireman and tell him the location of the fire.

Fires may be reported by phoning number 456, also. Squirrel monkeys are not specially intelligent, yet have a brain case proportionately larger than man's.

Scores of islands ride the two-and-one-half-mile-wide brink of majestic Iguazu Falls, between Brazil and Argentina. In dry seasons more than 250 island-separated cascades of water have been counted along the rugged ledge.
