K-9 Corps Credited With Reducing Patrol Casualties

With 7th Infantry in Korea — (U.P.) The Army's K-9 corps has been credited with reducing battle patrol casualties by 60 per cent in Korea.

After experiments with the third squad of the 26th Infantry scout dog platoon, it was found that patrols can penetrate deeper and move faster with less risk of casualties when they are spear-headed by dogs.

The canines, classified as silent scout dogs, are all German shepherds. Of eight dogs in the squad, six are scouts, one is a messenger dog and the other is still training.

Each dog has a handler, all of whom are graduates of the Army's six-month dog training course at Fort Riley, Kans. The handlers must have an Army intelligence rating of at least 110.

Freeze and Point
 The dogs are trained to indicate soundlessly the presence of enemy soldiers. At the point of a combat patrol, the dogs approach their quarry downwind.
 They indicate human scents by either freezing or pointing their tails.

Their handlers recount numerous stories of the dogs' perceptiveness during the average 12 weekly patrols.

Cpl. Hazen Stipe of Mt. Pleasant, Ia., tells how his dog, Flash, saved a patrol from possible annihilation.

"We were moving down a valley when Flash gave the alert," Stipe said. "We didn't see anything, so we went on. A little later Flash froze again."

"A couple of scouts moved out and found that the enemy had set up an ambush. The Reds outnumbered us, so we sat tight and called in artillery. Flash got a credit for that one."

The German shepherds have had little trouble adapting themselves to the Korean climate.
 They have two coats of hair which keep them comfortable in sub-freezing temperatures. Although they shed one layer during the summer, the dogs prefer the winter climate.
