Northwestern Dams Money Cut in Bill Stalled in Congress

Washington (U.P.)—A $584,061,600 bill to finance river and harbor improvement and flood control projects during this fiscal year was snarled in Congress Monday in a dispute over appropriations for a dam in Georgia and South Carolina.

The bill, reported out by the Senate-House conferees had included funds for seven projects in the Pacific northwest before Sen. Burnet R. Maybank (D-S.C.) insisted that the bill be returned to the conference committee. Threatening a filibuster, Maybank and Sen. Olin D. Johnston, another South Carolina lawmaker, succeeded in forcing Senate rejection of the bill and sent it back to committee for the third time.

Northwest Sums Cut
Here are the amounts authorized for Pacific Northwest projects in the stalled bill, compared with amounts originally budgeted:

Dams in Oregon: The Dalles—$20,000,000, down from $37,500,000; McNary—$63,000,000, down from $66,000,000; Lookout Point—$16,625,000, down from $17,250,000; Detroit—$10,350,000, down from $10,700,000; Willamette river bank protection—$400,000, the same amount budgeted.

Dams in Washington: Chief Joseph—$15,000,000, down from $25,000,000; Ice Harbor—no funds authorized though $5,000,000 had been budgeted for this new project.

Albion Falls, Ida.—$7,000,000, down from $8,100,000.

Glimmer of Hope In Peace Negotiations In Red Prisoner Hint

By HOMER JENKS
United Press Correspondent
There is a glimmer of hope in the long-deadlocked Korean truce negotiations.

The Communists for the first time have hinted they are willing to compromise on the sole issue blocking an armistice—whether Korean and Chinese war prisoners must be returned to the Reds against their will.

The Reds dropped a hint of compromise last Thursday. Then, reluctant to commit themselves further in public, they asked for secret sessions to discuss it further. That looked as though they might be in a bargaining mood, and the United Nations consented.

Confers In Secrecy

For four days now, the two sides have been conferring under a pledge of secrecy in the big tent beside a dusty road at Panmunjom.

Nothing has leaked out on how the negotiations are going, but it is clear they have reached a crucial stage. The outcome will determine whether there is to be an armistice within the next few weeks—or months more of swapped insults and frustrating debate.

Only the paragraph relating to repatriation of war prisoners remains to be settled in the armistice agreement. The other 62 paragraphs already have been agreed upon.

Bitter Debate
That one paragraph—No. 51 in the truce pact—has been the subject of bitter debate ever since last December 22.

It was on that date the U. N.'s Red Adm. Ruthven E. Libby first served notice on the Communists that the Allies would not force prisoners to go back to the Red side against their will. And the U. N. has stuck to this position ever since.

The Communists from the beginning have demanded that all prisoners be repatriated, at the point of bayonets if necessary. They stuck to it until last Thursday.

Then they began hedging. They submitted a proposal which chief U. N. delegate Maj.

Gen. William K. Harrison cautiously said "may be important and may not be."

Another Allied spokesman said the proposal was "loaded with gimmicks."

The text was not announced, but the proposal seemed to boil down to this:

Proposal Outlined

"Let's compile new lists of prisoners, grouping them by nationality. Then we're willing to let all prisoners listed as South Koreans who joined our Army and then were captured by you choose whether to stay on the Allied side or return to us."

"But all other prisoners, be they North Koreans, Chinese or United Nations, must be returned to their respective sides."

This marked the first time the Reds have accepted even a limited conception of voluntary repatriation, but it didn't go anywhere near far enough to satisfy the U. N.'s demand that all prisoners be given the right to refuse to go home.

Wall Street

New York (U.P.)—Republican antics at their Chicago convention Monday detracted interest from the stock market. Transactions fell off to their lowest level since June 17.

Wall Streeters, remembering their poor guess in 1948, didn't try to predict the outcome of the convention. They read the dispatches with apparent interest, however, and remained aloof from the market.

The main body of stocks held in a fractional area. Steels ignored an unsettled strike entering its sixth week and held steady. Motors were steady to easier. Rails were mostly lower. Dow-Jones closing stock averages: 30 industrials 274.20 off 0.75; 20 railroads 101.44 off 0.92; 15 utilities 49.72 unchanged; 65 stocks 105.71 off 0.44.

Sales Monday approximated 1,080,000 shares compared with 1,150,000 shares traded Thursday.

MEDFORD (OREGON) MAIL TRIBUNE—NINE

Oregon Delegation At Chicago Ready For Fight For Ike

Chicago (U.P.)—Oregon's full 18-man, Eisenhower-pledged delegation to the Republican National convention was on the convention floor in International Amphitheater here Monday, ready to "go down the line" for the general.

State Sen. Howard C. Belton, Canby, a member of the delegation, said "we will stay with the general until released by him."

Most, if not all, of the delegation were expected to support a motion by Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., Eisenhower's floor manager, to prohibit contested delegates from voting on the seating of other contested delegates.

The delegation met Sunday to map out convention voting plans after a breakfast meeting attended by Sen. Robert A. Taft.

State Sen. William E. Walsh, Coos Bay, a member of the crucial credentials committee of the convention, told the delegation the tactics employed by Taft forces in voting most of the contested delegates to Taft, have, in his opinion, gained delegates for Eisenhower.

Walsh said "this experience on contests from the South convinces me more than ever that in Oregon we have the soundest election system."

Other members of the delegation said they were more enthusiastic than ever over their state's primary election system of binding delegates to the choice of the voters.

As We Live

By ELIZABETH HURLOCK, PH.D.

PATIENCE, TACT ARE NEEDED WITH ELDERLY

When people reach old age, they need special handling. You cannot treat them as you would a younger person because their mental makeup is not that of a younger person. This is the problem that is bothering this young woman.

Q. My mother is a nervous, high-strung woman. Whenever my sister comes to see her there is a heated argument. I admit our mother is usually wrong but my sister, even when she saw our mother was becoming upset and losing control of herself, wouldn't stop, even when my Mother told her to. I can't seem to make my sister understand that she should end the arguments when she sees our mother getting so upset. My sister always has to have the last word. Am I right in saying that we should have patience with her?

A. Everyone who comes in contact with your mother or any elderly person should have patience. It takes more than that to handle them properly. You must have tact, understanding, and a high degree of kindness.

As people begin to go downhill physically, as they invariably do with advancing age, they go downhill mentally too. Their ability to reason, to remember, and to be logical in their thinking deteriorates.

Under such conditions, you really cannot argue with them. You must let them call black white, if they want to do so. And under no circumstances should you contradict them and try to prove that white is white. This will only upset them and when they are upset, their thinking becomes even more muddled than before.

Try to persuade your sister that she is being both unkind and unfair when she engages in an argument with your mother. Her contacts should be a source of pleasure to the old lady.

When she is arguing with a younger person, your sister can have the last word if it gives her satisfaction. But with a person your mother's age, it is a different story. Try to convince her that if she cannot stop arguments, the kindest thing she could do would be to give up her visits to your mother. As things now stand, her visits bring more harm than good.

If you have a personal problem, write Elizabeth Hurlock in care of this newspaper.
