Tactics Used by Reds To End Church Influence Told

London — (U.P.) — In a review of the Communists' post-war fight for supreme power in Hungary, the veteran Communist leader and general party secretary, Matyas Rakosi, revealed the tactics used by the Communists to break down the influence of the Catholic church.

In an article in the Communist party monthly, Social Review, Rakosi described how his party attacked the church and destroyed its power under the pretext that it was harboring "reactionary elements."

The campaign against the church came only after the Communists had succeeded in compromising and destroying the largest Hungarian political organization, the Smallholders' party, and in splitting and absorbing the Socialists.

In addition, the Communists had brought under their control the security police and their trade unions. Only after having thus prepared the ground did they attempt to attack the Christian churches and the Catholic church as the last in the long list of organizations which they had marked for destruction.

In Rakosi's own words, the Communists' campaign against the churches developed as follows:

"The winning over (by the Communists) of the masses of peasants, the small bourgeoisie and, in certain places, even of the industrial workers was rendered extremely difficult by the reaction hiding behind the cloak of the church."

"The majority of the church leaders were opposed to democracy from the very first moment. This opposition was particularly on the part of the Catholic church, whose lands were taken away by the land reform. The churches fought almost united against us from 1945 to 1948."

"First of all we broke up the reactionary united front of the churches. By making use of the democratic possibilities in the Reformed Calvinist and the Evangelical Lutheran churches, we were able to mobilize the believers who sympathized with us. An agreement was reached in 1948 in the spirit of mutual understanding and indulgence which ensured the peaceful co-existence of the people's democracy and these churches."

Having thus eliminated the Protestants from the fight, the Communists proceeded to make a frontal attack on the Catholic church, by far the greatest spiritual power in Hungary."

"The position with the Catholic church was different," Rakosi went on. "The leaders of this church maintained close relations with the American imperialists, by order of the Vatican."

"After unmasking of the Smallholder's party as the agents of the American imperial-ists, the Social Democratic party was ordered to man the front line. When the treacherous Social Democrat leaders have shared the same fate" that is to say when the Communists had eliminated them too — "it was the turn of the anti-democratic leaders of the Catholic church who became the most exposed representatives of American imperialism."

"Their activities became particularly strong at the end of 1948 when, as the Rakosi trial revealed, this attitude would have been part of the armed invasion which Tito and his gang planned at that time with the aid of spies and provocateurs who had been planted into the Hungarian workers' movement."

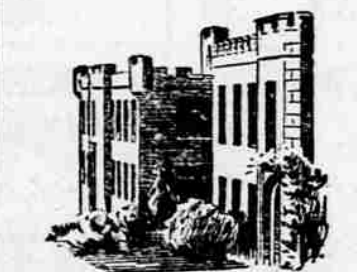

"The Hungarian people's democracy, however, was on the alert. It brought Cardinal Mindszenty to trial, which threw a light upon his activities and those of his companions, and which disclosed that under the activities of the church they had not only planned to restore the old landlord-capitalistic order but also the hated Hapsburg regime."

The trial was accompanied by a gigantic propaganda campaign against Catholicism in general and the Vatican in particular and resulted in the elimination from office and from public life through trials, imprisonment and other forms of persecution of Catholic laymen, bishops and prominent laymen."

The remaining Hungarian bishops were forced to accept a government-imposed compromise which completely eliminated Catholic influence from public life and is steadily diminishing the role of religion in education and in the private life of the Hungarians."
